ISRAEL, JORDAN SIGN TREATY

Peace sealed in gala Arava ceremony

ALON PINKAS

WITH colored balloons soaring and the echoes of a 21-gun salute ringing, Israel and Jordan signed a peace treaty yesterday at the Arava border crossing.

The historic accord was signed at 2:10 p.m. by Prime Ministers Yitzhak Rabin and Abdul Salam Majali, as President Bill Clinton, King Hussein, and President Ezer Weizman looked on.

sean, and President Ezer Weizman looked on.

"It is not only our states that are making peace with each other today, not only our nations that are shaking hands in peace here in the Arava," said Rabin. "You and I, your majesty, are making peace here, our own peace, the peace of soldiers and the peace of friends."

"This is peace with dignity, this is peace with commitment, this is our gift to our peoples and the generations to come," said Hussein.

"Here in this region, which is the home of not only both your faiths, but mine, I say: 'Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will inherit the earth,'" said Clinton, quoting Jesus's Sermon on the Mount.

Despite the announcement minutes before the ceremony started

that mortars had been fired from Lebanon into the Galilee panchan, it proceeded without a hitch.

Everyone seemed a winner, everyone gained political capital, except for the conspicuously absent PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat.

The first to arrive was Hussein, accompanied by Queen Noor. US Secretary of State Warren Christopher was next. The crowd of 5,000 stood as Rabin and his wife, Leah, arrived, with Foreign Minister Shimon Peres trailing several meters behind. President Ezer Weizman and his wife, Reuma, arrived three minutes later.

Weizman and Hussein embraced - to the delight of the audience.

It was 12:59:55 when the announcers declared the arrival of "William Jefferson Clinton, the president of the United States of America" - right on schedule.

As the heads of state and government took their places on the podium, they faced hundreds of American, Jordanian, and Israeli flags fluttering fiercely in the southerly desert wind.

Crown Prince Hassan, then the foreign ministers - Christopher, Peres, and Andrei Kozyrev of Russia, joined them.

The crowd sat on chairs arranged on the newly asphalted plaza in a former mine field straddling the border - Israeli generals in combat fatigues mixing with Jordanians in red keffiyehs, diplomats in ties and farmers in open-necked shirts, former prime minister Yitzhak Shamir and elder statesman Abba Eban - and ordinary people invited because they lost loved ones in the wars between the two countries now making peace.

Security was tight throughout the ceremony, with agents patrolling the blacktop and bleachers with bomb-sniffing dogs. Plumes of dust rose in the surrounding desert as armored personnel carriers from both sides roamed. Helicopters clattered overhead.

Standing in the 32 degree centigrade heat, the assembly observed a minute of silence for the war dead.

At the start of the hour-long ceremony, the Jordanian and Israeli army bands each played their national anthems, and then together played "The Star-Spangled Banner." Sheikh Mahmud Dabash read a portion from the Koran, and Haifa Chief Rabbi She'ar-Yashuv Cohen, who was a prisoner of war in Jordan during the War of Independence, read Psalm 121.

"This is the moment warriors in Jordan and Israel have dreamed of. The time of peace has come," emcee Haim Yavin, of Israel Television, said in officially opening the ceremony. His Jordanian counterpart, the deputy minister of protocol, repeated the words in Arabic and English.

The crowd - and Clinton - were visibly moved when two little girls, Lee Lotan of Israel and Hebas Smadi of Jordan, gave him flowers. Both their grandfathers had been killed in the Six Day War.

The dignitaries were introduced, and the speeches began; the treaty, the second between Israel and an Arab state, was signed and witnessed.

And then, it was the turn of the warriors. Five from each side: the respective chiefs of general staff, commanders of ground forces, air forces, Southern Command, and navy commanders (Israel was represented by the deputy commander) saluted each other, shook hands, and exchanged gifts.

Thousands of black, green, red, blue, and white balloons were released into the desert air. The ceremony was over.

When the signing of the agreement and the maps was completed, Yehuda Wachsmann, the father of Sgt. Nahshon Wachsmann, who was kidnapped by Hamas terrorists and murdered, stood up, then sat down again.

"It's a day of celebration for all of us. In the long run we must reach lasting peace and prosperity in the entire region," he said.

Clinton addresses Jordanian parliament

'US respects Islam,
but will fight terror'

DAVID MAKOVSKY
AMMAN

THE US has deep respect for Islam, but will combat those extremists who cynically exploit religion as a "cloak" to perpetrate violence in a bid to undermine Israel-Arab peace, President Bill Clinton told the Jordanian Parliament last night.

Sixteen members of the Islamic Front boycotted Clinton's speech before the 80-member Jordanian lower chamber, which was held in the presence of King Hussein.

Speaking in emphatic tones under the seal of the Hashemite Kingdom and greeted with warm applause, Clinton declared, "It is the age-old struggle between fear and hope. This is the conflict that grips the Middle East today. On one side stands the forces of terror and extremism, who cloak themselves in the rhetoric of religion and nationalism, but behave in ways that contradict the very teachings of their faith and mock their patriotism."

"These forces of reaction feed on disillusionment, poverty, and despair. They stoke the fires of violence. They seek to destroy the progress of this peace. To them I say: 'You cannot succeed, you will not succeed. For you are the past, not the future.'"

Clinton said peace must yield real benefits to people, so that militancy will not find fertile ground.

In a reversal of US policy, he declared US support for a Middle East development bank. However, he made clear that the body would not be up and running until extensive consultations with donors are held on how such an institution would be run.

Police brace for Clinton visit today

BILL HUTMAN

POLICE are bracing for possible unrest by Jerusalem Arabs and anti-government Jewish groups during President Bill Clinton's visit.

Jerusalem police chief Cmdr. Arye Amit said last night that Palestinian activists had called for a large protest of the Clinton visit on the Temple Mount tomorrow. He vowed that police would act to prevent it.

Moslem prayer services would be allowed as scheduled on the Temple Mount, but police would not allow rabble-rousers into the area, he said.

Many of the 5,000 policemen in Jerusalem this week - more than twice the normal number - have been stationed in Arab neighborhoods to ensure quiet.

"We understand that residents of eastern Jerusalem and surrounding villages have planned disturbances," Amit said. "We also understand that right-wing groups have planned all kinds of gimmicks to protest the visit."

"We simply are not going to allow any of these protesters to get near the routes used by the president. Even if it's just a few people, we can't take a chance that his convoy will be halted by protesters."

Amit said that the beefed-up forces have been in place virtually all week. Some 500 policemen are to be stationed at the King David Hotel throughout Clinton's stay. The street in front of the hotel is to be closed to traffic, and pedestrians will be searched before they are allowed to pass.

Police sources said it remains unclear if Clinton will visit the Old City, as they have received reports that the planned tour of the holy sites might be canceled.

Police had planned to seal off the Old City when Clinton was inside, by placing large police contingents at each gate.

The Last American Hostage in the Middle East

Sgt. Zachary Baumel

President Clinton,...

- On June 11, 1982 three Israeli soldiers were taken prisoner in the battle of Sultan Yakoub in Syrian controlled Lebanon. One of the captured men, Sgt. Zachary Baumel is an American citizen.
- On that day an American journalist from Time Magazine witnessed three captured Israeli soldiers on display in Damascus.
- In 1991, Israel helped secure the release of American and European hostages being held in Lebanon. Those men returned home, while Israeli hostages remained in captivity.
- In December 1993, Yasser Arafat, returned half of Baumel's ID tag to a top advisor of the Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.
- In the last year several eyewitnesses reported seeing Baumel alive in Syrian controlled Lebanon.

He was captured alive... He was seen alive...
Help us bring him home alive.

'A day like no other'

LIAT COLLINS

was showtime. King Hussein called it "a day like no other," and few of the 5,000 gathered at the Arava crossing point could dispute him. The mountain scenery, emphasizing the proximity of Eilat and Akaba, encouraged convivial relations between the Jordanians and Israelis who sat next to each other.

It was a day of peace. Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, President Clinton, and Queen Noor and Jilly Clinton didn't seem to mind joining in the same striking turquoise color.

Dress, in fact, played an important role. Or at least headress. Cpl. Effi, standing next to the journalists, had collected seven of the eight different types of hats at the site before the ceremony had even begun. Ma'ariv, Idiot Aharonot, the Israel Airports Authority, black and red caps stamped "Royal Jordanian" and hats issued by the Mei Eidan bottled water company were swapped and traded among Israelis and Jordanians.

The water was essential for those who arrived in the early hours of the morning to prepare to cover the event. Frequent reminders to drink were broadcast. "We don't want to have to bring ambulances here," explained a soldier from the IDF Spokesman's Office. Eilat's Josephthal Hospital was, however, placed on alert and apparently a separate room was set aside for Clinton in case of emergencies.

For the longest while, journalists had nothing much to do but interview each other and listen to the eclectic collection of piped classical music, ranging from the "Blue Danube" to the "Flight of the Bumble Bee." No wonder it felt surreal.

And then, as if to encourage the crowds to take their seats, the bands came on. Jordanian and Israeli military bands, one after the other, marked the beginning of the ceremony all had been waiting for.

The national anthems were played. The 21-gun salute was fired. And there was the emotional minute of silence "to remember those for whom this peace came too late," as emcee Haim Yavin said.

If it had been exciting, it was suddenly sad. But not for long. The leaders addressed the crowds, the cameras and the hidden millions of television spectators around the world. Only the shouts from the Jordanian side of "Long Live the King" momentarily recalled the tension. Some Israelis, unable to understand what the yells meant, temporarily feared the worst - the shouts of terrorists.

But despite the fears of the hundreds of security men who wandered around the site, the event passed without incident. So unlike the Cairo signing ceremony with the PLO, it was orderly, dignified, and happy. A collective sigh of relief went out as Clinton, President Ezer Weizman, King Hussein, and others witnessed that, this time, nobody would object to signing the agreements.

Hot and sweating, the dignitaries themselves began to borrow sunhats and sunglasses and wipe the sweat from their faces. In their suits and ties, they probably suffered far more than their generals, who provided a highlight by exchanging gifts, saluting each other and shaking hands.

The end was close. The three main actors came forward and looked as if they were about to take a bow. Those balloons which had not escaped during Tuesday's storm were released. And again the national anthems were played, making one automatically reach for the remote control to switch off as if at the end of the day's broadcasts.

Side by side, the members of the Jordanian and Israeli military bands smile and shake hands for the camera. (Ariel Jeruzolimski)

Veteran's message to Hussein: Bravo!

LIAT COLLINS

WHAT did Dan Prass think about during the moment's silence at yesterday's signing ceremony?

"I thought of the peace. I thought how happy I am to see this. And I remembered the soldier who lay beside me in the hospital and died of his injuries five years after the war ended."

For Prass, confined to a wheelchair, "the war" will always mean the Six Day War in which he was injured as he fought near Jerusalem's Rockefeller Museum.

And what would Prass say to King Hussein if he had the chance to meet him in person?

"That's a difficult question. But I think I would say to him 'Kol Hakavod!' [Bravo!]. He did a brave thing."

As at all past meetings, many Jordanians were pleased to speak to Israelis, but not willing to give their names, despite the fact that they trotted out well-worn phrases such as "I'm very happy" and "It's very good."

An anonymous colonel was no exception. He had met Israelis before in the US, and was used to their direct approach, but unwilling or unable to cope with it. Only one question momentarily flooded him: When would he be prepared to be identified in an Israeli paper? "Oh, I don't know. It could be as soon as another five minutes the way this peace is going," he joked.

Maj.-Gen. Talsin Shurdon was willing to give his name to The Jerusalem Post, even though he is the head of Jordanian Military Intelligence. "We must work in cooperation to bring peace to the region," he said, noting that he had met Israeli officers several times, "and each time the barriers came down a little more."

Israeli Arabs ecstatic

DAVID RUDGE

"THIS is a great day, a holiday for the Arab and Jewish peoples," declared Hussein Suleiman, spokesman for the monitoring committee of the Israeli Arab leadership, as he prepared to watch the signing of the peace treaty on television at his home in Mash'had, near Nazareth.

"Arabs throughout the country have been waiting for this moment for so many years - the chance to be able to freely visit relatives and family in Jordan," said Suleiman, who is also head of Mash'had local council.

"You can feel the atmosphere of happiness in every Arab town and village throughout the country," he said. "There is not one family who doesn't have friends or family in Jordan."

"That is one of the reasons why Jordan has always had a warm place in our heart," Suleiman said. "Now we look forward to the days, the very moving moments, when we will be able to meet relatives we have not seen for years and some whom we have never seen. There will be a lot of hasty parties."

Suleiman said the fact that PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat was not invited to the ceremony and the dispute over the future of Jerusalem should not be allowed to become major obstacles to the path of peace.

"It's a great pity that many leaders from the Arab world weren't present at the ceremony for this historic moment," said Suleiman. "Problems won't be solved by issuing statements via the media, but by all the sides, as well as Jordan and the PLO, sitting down together and discussing and solving the problems in face-to-face talks," he said.

He maintained that the majority of Israeli Arabs fully support the peace process and oppose those who were trying to torpedo it through acts of terrorism.

"We have made it clear and we reiterate that groups like the military wing of Hamas have no right to exist," he said. "Hamas, as a political organization, has a legitimate right like any other movement. But those who commit acts of murder against innocent civilians, Jews and Arabs, invalidate themselves by their crimes."

"We call on Arab states to follow in the footsteps of Jordan and expect peace will be achieved between Israel and all the Arab nations, because the main problem between Israel and the Palestinians is on the way to being solved and there is no reason for others not to join the peace process," he said.

Hailing King Hussein's courage, the president said the US stands behind Jordan. "We will not let you down," Clinton proclaimed.

He reiterated that the US would forgive the estimated $700 million Jordanian debt, and would encourage other countries to forgive Jordan's debts as well, since Jordan is taking "risks for peace."

A first joint Israeli-Jordanian publication - a pictorial guide and souvenir book called Jordan - was published yesterday by Palphot, an Israeli publishing house. THE "BENEFITS" OF PEACE?

- Will the Rabin Government's peace treaty with Jordan, like the Rabin-Arafat "peace" agreement, which has seen a marked increase in Arab terrorist attacks against Jews... also bring Israel the "benefits" of peace?
- Will the United States - which forged and forgave Jordan's King Hussein - who supported Iraq's Saddam Hussein - also bring Israel the "benefits" of peace?
- Will a government which gives Jordan the rights to Har Habyat - our Temple Mount - while forbidding Jews to pray at Judaism's holiest shrine... also bring Israel the "benefits" of peace?

NEWSLINE with ARA VOSKIAN

Voskian is a Jerusalem-born Palestinian and news editor at The Jordan Times in Amman.

The Jordan Times ran a piece today saying that people will have to be readjusted to accept peace with Israel. What did this mean?

I would presume it is to show both the good sides of the agreement, the benefits of peace, much more than the no war, no peace situation. We have to show that peace works.

Do you think Jordanians will accept the transformation in political relations overnight?

It takes years for the heart to accept. We may agree with peace in our minds, but it's going to take a generation to change, though I hope it will be much sooner.

Have Jordanians known about Hussein's long relationship with Israeli leaders?

I think it was a very well known secret. But it is not an important issue. The king is such an outgoing person. He is one of the nicest people in the world that I know. I'm sure whatever he did was for the benefit of the country.

Many Palestinians here are angry, saying that Hussein is trying to hold on to the Moslem holy sites in Jerusalem over which he has no rights. What is your view?

He has always been the rightful guardian. Whatever changes in the future may be made, as the king said, will be up to the Palestinian people, but he has always been the guardian, since the day I was born. PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat said those who don't accept the Palestinians' claims in Jerusalem can "go and drink Gaza sea water." Is that considered an insult?

People do not pay a lot of attention to that. In politics, a lot of people say a lot of things, but at the end of the day there is always agreement among the Arab leaders.

What are Jordanian attitudes to Israelis. Will they be welcome? We asked a few questions on that subject to children and grownups. There are all kinds of opinion, but the vast majority will accept Israelis. You can rest assured that no one is going to hug and kiss you, at least not now. When the peace is comprehensive, things will go far. But people for instance do not like that Israelis are still shooting Palestinians. Should Palestinians feel the treaty benefits them?

I support the king all the way. I wish he had done it a few years earlier. The signing is to the benefit of all. The people know the peace is the right thing to do. You know after so many years of war you need to convince them. You want to be sure it is right. There is always some lingering doubt about the enemy.

I am a Palestinian, born in Jerusalem, and for me having the peace is the best thing that ever happened.

Army brass meet and exchange gifts

ISRAELI and Jordanian generals, after fighting each other for years, shook hands and exchanged gifts yesterday at the end of the peace treaty signing ceremony.

Five generals from each side mingled after their leaders signed an historic treaty at this desolate border post to end a 46-year state of war.

"We lost 2,580 martyrs, many were injured or handicapped and are still suffering from their war and its consequences," said Lt.-Gen. Mahmoud Hammad, head of the Jordanian Army's ground forces.

"Likewise, the Israeli side also suffered, many miseries were inflicted on them," he told Reuters.

"This [peace treaty], God willing, is the prize of this long conflict." His Israeli counterpart, Maj.-Gen. Ze'ev Livne, was equally glad to be meeting on a peace rather than a war footing.

"It is a wonderful feeling," he said. "This is a historic day," beamed Maj.-Gen. Mohammed Malkawi, head of the Jordanian Army's southern command, site of the signing ceremony.

"Peace was achieved on the hands of the brave men, his majesty and Mr. Rabin... We have to protect it with all our means."

Malkawi said most of the Jordanian occupied land which Israel agreed to return under the treaty will fall under his jurisdiction.

"Inshallah [God willing] and very soon, we will move the forces to the new locations which we will take over, starting on November 1," said Malkawi, who fought against Israel for control of Jerusalem.

Under the treaty, Israel is scheduled to withdraw its forces to the newly demarcated international border over the next nine months.

But Jordanian officials say they will withdraw fully in a period not exceeding three months from the date the ratified treaties are exchanged.

"Now we have to redeploy our forces all along the border in line with the era of peace, remove mine fields, cut through wire fences, and cooperate," said Hammad.

Many Jordanian and Israeli officers, who met secretly during courses at US military academies, appeared relaxed in each other's company.

"How nice to see you here after 12 years," a Jordanian sergeant told his Israeli colleague as they hugged. "Finally we can meet under the sun."

A farewell to arms

THE Israeli chief of the general staff stood opposite the Jordanian chief of the general staff. They saluted each other.

The army bands played the "Star Spangled Banner" as the president of the US placed his right arm across his chest. To his left, the Russian foreign minister stood at attention.

Five years ago, this would have sounded like a fairy tale.

To some it had the majestic qualities of a biblical setting, temporarily invaded by modern aviation and telecommunication technology.

To others, it may have lacked the grandeur of the White House lawn, with the president of the US eminent present, but in the unfamiliar role of a guest.

But to all it was a day to cherish. Ministers, Supreme Court justices, religious leaders, MKs from both ends of the spectrum, businessmen, bureaucrats and the entire general staff all celebrated.

Someone had reassured the organizers that US President Bill Clinton is used to the simmering heat from his days in Arkansas.

But when the dust hit the president's eyes, he tried wiping them and then resorted to sunglasses. Rabin also had his sunglasses on, as did former prime minister Yitzhak Shamir, who waved his right hand with impatience when asked how he felt.

It is an agreement between the world's longest serving ruler and the country with which his grandfather, Abdullah tried to coexist. It is an agreement between two countries which had been in a state of war for almost five decades, a state of belligerency that blurred the commonality of their strategic interests.

The "sympathetic king," with whom peace has been "just around the corner" since 1967, finally became convinced that the convergence of mutual interests, global and regional developments, and changing political realities rendered peace ripe.

It was a day of peace, a day that came at last, albeit 46 years late.

American Arabs and Jews on Clinton 'peace flight'

ALLISON KAPLAN SOMMER

A SPECIAL peace flight accompanied President Bill Clinton to the Middle East, as American Arabs and Jews traveled together to yesterday's ceremony of reconciliation.

Nineteen Arab-American leaders, 30 Jewish-American leaders, and five additional religious leaders flew to the Arava to join the US delegation as Clinton's official presidential guests.

They were joined at the ceremony by additional American Jewish leaders, who had vied for coveted invitations. The atmosphere on the plane was "warm and joyous," said Lynn Lyss, chairman of the National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council. She said the rapport with the Arab-Americans "was like a coming together after we have been kept apart for so long."

Just before the plane landed, the travelers organized an impromptu interdenominational prayer service. One of the Arab-American leaders read from the Koran, and Jewish Theological Seminary Chancellor Ismar Schorsch said the prayer Oseh Shalom.

Excited by their presence at the historic event, the American Jewish leaders expressed their support for Clinton's gesture of attending the ceremony.

"I think it represents a role that the American government has taken in the region from the beginning, and that is a credit to the president," said Lester Pollack, chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations.

"He is making a statement that even in the face of the violence and terrorism in the area that the peace train will keep on moving."

Clinton visit to cause traffic chaos

RESIDENT Bill Clinton is coming to town today, but amid all the excitement and anticipation many Jerusalemites have just one thing on their minds - the traffic mess he is bringing with him.

"Stay at home," was the advice of Deputy Cmdr. Ido Gutman, head of the Jerusalem Police Traffic Division.

"Most roads are going to be closed," Gutman said. "But those that are to be closed are so central that it is going to make things impossible all over."

The main entrance to the city from Tel Aviv is to be closed for several hours this afternoon and most of tomorrow morning, making life even more difficult for both residents and commuters.

Police said that American security officials had insisted roads used by Clinton be clear of both traffic and parked cars.

But, Jerusalem police were quick to add they would have closed the roads anyway to help ensure Clinton's safety. "We don't want to take any chances," said one senior officer.

Pedestrians will be allowed on the sidewalks along the closed roads. In an Israeli TV interview earlier this week, Jerusalem Mayor Ehud Olmert called on residents of the capital to come out along Clinton's route in large numbers this afternoon to give him a warm public welcome.

"Mr. Clinton is a friend of Israel and a welcome guest," Olmert said. "There is no doubt that his visit will strengthen the position of Jerusalem in the world. We will do everything possible to give him a warm welcome."

BILL HUTMAN

Yesterday, municipal crews rushed to finish putting up American and Israeli flags, clean streets, and fix up public flower gardens in the parts of the city Clinton will pass.

More than 2,000 flags were put up by the municipality, which also organized some 1,500 school pupils to greet Clinton waving flags outside Beit Hanassi tomorrow morning.

At least one school has been closed out of concern pupils would not be able to get there due to the closure of roads for Clinton, parents reported.

The municipality has distributed over 20,000 leaflets informing residents which roads are being closed.

The leaflets offered some good news: The city would be "understanding" in the enforcement of parking regulations in areas where parking was not forbidden because of the Clinton visit.

The city also offered its own bit of advice to residents: "Show patience in these historic times."

Fatah, Hamas order protest strike

JON IMMANUEL

A GENERAL strike ordered by Fatah and Hamas in the territories outside Gaza and Jericho closed shops and public schools, interfered with traffic, and threatened to become violent in protests against the Israel-Jordan treaty yesterday.

About 500 Fatah supporters marched for an hour in Hebron, and some burned pictures of King Hussein and his brother, Crown Prince Hassan. Some shouted "Death to Hussein," and there were reports Israeli and Jordanian flags were burned.

The choice of Hebron for the main protest, where Fatah is relatively weak, served to warn the many pro-Jordanian Muslim conservatives in the city. In a recent Palestinian survey, one-third of those polled in Hebron opted for union with Jordan, more than in any other town.

In Ramallah, considered a strongly PLO town, pro-Hamas demonstrators crying "Allahu Akbar" marched downtown and then dispersed.

In Nablus, troops dispersed demonstrators after they began throwing stones.

In Jerusalem, border policemen blocked off Salah a-Din Street after disturbances there in the morning.

There was no strike in Gaza or Jericho, where the Palestinian Authority holds power, indicating the strike in the rest of the territories was as much a muscle-flexing exercise as a protest.

Fatah activists and, to a lesser extent, Hamas activists were out in several towns enforcing the strike. Access to Ramallah was blocked in the morning by activists.

Col. Jibril Rajoub, the Jericho security chief, expressed the depth of the Palestinian resentment of Hussein.

"Hussein is no more than a puppet of the Americans in this region," he said. "He is not responsible for the holy places in Jerusalem, and we consider such a step by him as a declaration of war on the Palestinian people."

However, pro-Jordanian officials said Hussein has upheld his claim to the holy places and last year recovered the golden dome of the Mosque of Omar at his own expense.

Rajoub said he had no part in arranging the strike, but the disturbances were a natural response by Palestinians to Jordan's attempt to alter agreements. Not all Palestinians were in agreement.

"Hussein has controlled the Jerusalem holy sites since 1953," said one shopkeeper. "Palestinians cut relations with Hussein, and now they want him to deal with Israel only after checking with Palestinians."

A leaflet of the Fatah Higher Council, headed by Faisal Hussein, asserted that Jerusalem is indivisible from the political, religious, civil, and national point of view, and it warned Hussein against visiting Jerusalem as long as it is under Israeli occupation.

Clinton: Arafat promised to fight terror groups

News agencies

US President Bill Clinton said yesterday that PLO leader Yasser Arafat gave him a "firm and unambiguous" promise to fight Hamas and other extremist groups.

Clinton, who had expressed frustration with the recent wave of violence in the region, proclaimed himself "satisfied with the response."

Clinton met with Arafat and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak in Cairo.

Mubarak said the countries laboring for reconciliation in the troubled region must not allow terrorists to "spoil the peace process."

Clinton sounded upbeat after his session with Arafat on the need for the PLO leader to do more to control Hamas and other militant Islamic extremist groups.

But the promise came even as Arafat, angry over the treaty giving Jordan a special role in administering Jerusalem's Muslim holy sites, organized protests in Judea, Samaria and east Jerusalem.

"Chairman Arafat said he would continue to do all he could to combat terrorism, specifically Hamas, but other groups as well," Clinton said. "I felt that we got a very firm and unambiguous response," the president added. "He understands, I think, clearly, that Hamas is his enemy now."

Clinton said he told Arafat that he needed to show the same courage in fighting militancy that he showed in making peace with Israel a year ago. Both Clinton and Mubarak said they were satisfied with Arafat's response.

"At this moment of opportunity,

"Arafat said, 'I'm doing that. I will do it. Nobody has more of an interest in it than I have,'" the official said.

Marwan Kanafani, spokesman for Arafat, told Gaza reporters that in his meeting with Clinton, Arafat never said he would crack down on Hamas. "We only talked about peace and those who are supporting and opposing peace and how to create a better environment for the peace process."

Arafat also asked Clinton to help lift the closure which which was imposed last week, since this was causing economic difficulties and threatened the peace process. He said Clinton listened very sympathetically.

The Palestinian Authority appealed to the American Consulate in Jerusalem yesterday to coordinate any trip by Clinton into eastern Jerusalem with them, Israel Radio reported.

Peace with Jordan

Arafat loses power

IT WAS NOT a good day for Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat.

Arafat, who was not invited to the ceremony, met in Cairo with President Bill Clinton earlier yesterday and then rushed back to his Gaza headquarters to catch the second half of the festivities on TV.

Five minutes after turning on his set, power was cut in Arafat's office. The chairman ordered lunch, instead.

Jordanian police stage security crackdown after large Moslem demo

AMMAN (AP) - Jordanian police banned anti-government protest rallies yesterday. The order came a day after Jordan's largest Moslem fundamentalist group drew 5,000 people to a protest gathering in downtown Amman.

The Islamic Action Front, the political arm of the Moslem Brotherhood, had planned a second demonstration after the treaty signing to underscore displeasure with the pact, which the fundamentalists have termed a "sellout" of Jordanian and Palestinian rights.

Security was heightened in the kingdom to avert any incident that would mar the historic event.

In Akaba, army vehicles patrolled the streets, while police and special forces were deployed all along the 5 km. road leading to the royal palace.

Forces at a checkpoint on the main road inspected everyone entering the city, checking identity papers, searching cars, and even opening suitcases and briefcases.

In Amman, anti-riot police were dispersed at main road intersections. Police and army troops, armed with machine guns and automatic rifles, were on rooftops surrounding the parliament, and extra security forces were posted around the US Embassy.

About 100 police stood guard outside the headquarters of the Professional Associations to make sure their scheduled morning protest was not held.

The associations, dominated by hard-liners who oppose Western interference in the Middle East, include lawyers, medical officers, journalists, and other trade groups.

Leith Shubailat, a former member of parliament and head of the Engineers' Association, said the signing marked "a black day" in Jordan's history.

"We cannot make any peace with Israel, because they have usurped our land... Our people are angry with this treaty," he said.

The government declared yesterday a national holiday for the treaty signing. Government offices, schools and banks were closed, as were many commercial shops.

Thousands were expected to watch state-run Jordan television's live broadcasts of the day's events. State radio also was covering the activities, interspersing its news reports with mood music. It included a new "Song for Peace" performed by a local folk group, Mirage.

YAD VASHEM THE HOLOCAUST MARTYRS' AND HEROES' REMEMBRANCE AUTHORITY

Galilee pupils learn about peace – and war

DAVID RUDGE

PUPILS in Galilee panhandle schools were discussing the peace treaty with Jordan and watching the preparations for the signing ceremony on TV at about 12:30, when the sirens sounded and area residents were ordered into bomb shelters and security rooms.

"We were in the library talking about the peace, when suddenly there was an explosion and we had to go to the shelters," said Ma'ama Shamyani, 11, of Kiryat Shmona.

The mortar attack came as a surprise, despite the Katyusha rockets that hit the Galilee over the weekend.

On the previous occasion, residents of the North had been expecting some form of retaliation after they heard that IDF shells had hit a house in southern Lebanon early in the week, killing five people.

"The children were more upset than ever before," said Samir Weinberg, a mother of five from Metulla. "They couldn't understand what was happening and, more importantly, they couldn't understand why they had to go to the shelters and security rooms."

husband Reuven.

"The alarm was raised in the middle of the hearing, and the judge ordered the court cleared. My secretary's daughter almost fainted from the shock and the suddenness of the alert. My first thought was to race to pick up my young daughter at a nursery in a nearby kibbutz and get back home to make sure everyone was safe."

"I drove past one army roadblock, but was turned away at another on the way to the kibbutz, which was near to where the shells fell. I had no choice but to go back home and telephone from there. I was told that all the children were in the security room and everything was okay," she said.

"Everybody is happy about the peace treaty with Jordan, but there is a feeling that whenever anything bad or good happens, we are among the first to have to pay the price. We feel a bit like punching bags."

"If President Clinton had been here at the time and not in the Arava, I'm sure he would have a better understanding of our security problems, and this might have influenced his attitude, especially in the talks with Syria," she added.

Hizbullah sends Assad a political message

DAVID RUDGE

THE attack from Lebanon on the Galilee panhandle as the peace treaty between Jordan and Israel was about to be signed in the Arava, yesterday constitutes a form of "political message."

Long range at civilian targets from firing, trying to inflict casualties, cause damage, and generally disrupt the lives of residents has been an all too frequent occurrence along the northern border.

On this occasion, however, there can be little doubt that the main aim was to show the world that the extremist Muslim groups and Palestinian factions which oppose the peace process were not alone.

There can be no justification for the barrage – unlike Hizbullah's Katyusha rocket attacks on the Galilee over the weekend, which the organization said were in retaliation for the IDF shelling of a house in south Lebanon in which five people were killed.

The timing of the attack yesterday was clearly deliberate, signalling solidarity with the rejectionists and defiance of those who are promoting peace with those whom the perpetrators see as the "Zionist enemy."

It was also a resounding slap in the face for Syrian President Hafez Assad on the eve his scheduled meeting with US President Bill Clinton on the first visit by an American president to Damascus in 20 years.

Assad is trying to get Syria's name removed from the US blacklist of countries which sponsor terrorism and are involved in the drug trade, as a prelude to seeking American aid to revitalize his country's ailing economy.

Clinton and Secretary of State Warren Christopher have made it clear, especially recently, that America first expects Syria to crack down on terrorist organizations operating in Syria and areas under its control or supervision, such as most of Lebanon.

A call for quiet was undoubtedly passed to Hizbullah leaders when they met with senior Syrian officials – including the head of Syria's intelligence service in Lebanon, Gen. Ghazi Kaanan – in Damascus earlier this week.

Despite the call, which was presumably accompanied by veiled but clear warnings of the dire consequences of disobedience, the attack on the North went ahead as world leaders gathered in the Arava.

Assad professes to be the "guardian" of the Land of the Cedars. In practice, his troops control most parts of the country, and Lebanese leaders pay obedience to the "Fox of Damascus." And it is in the Syrian capital that major policy decisions are made regarding Lebanon.

It is not clear whether a break-away Hizbullah faction was responsible for the firing, or the Believers Resistance – which recently announced it was joining with Hamas to force Israel to release Islamic leaders – or indeed one of the rejectionist Palestinian factions.

What is certain is that the incident is an acute embarrassment for Assad himself and the whole of the Syrian hierarchy. The attack was most definitely not the kind of reception Assad had in mind for Clinton.

It also demonstrates that Syria is not, perhaps, in complete control of Lebanon, and there are elements which are even prepared to defy Assad himself.

The pressure is now on Assad to make more than symbolic gestures and peaceful overtures, of the kind transmitted to Israel by Foreign Minister Farouk Shara. Clinton also is likely to press Assad to commit himself to fewer words and more deeds in terms of combating the opponents of peace.

Clinton and Secretary of State Warren Christopher have made it clear, especially recently, that America first expects Syria to crack down on terrorist organizations operating in Syria and areas under its

Syrians welcome Clinton, but won't 'surrender'

News agencies

DAMASCUS – While Jordan and Israel were signing the treaty, hundreds of workers planted flowers and painted the curbs in preparation for today's grand welcome for President Bill Clinton.

The visit has been welcomed by the state-run media as a new opportunity for progress in negotiations with Israel.

President Hafez Assad has denounced the treaty, because it allows Israel to continue cultivating small parcels of Jordanian land on a lease basis.

On the President Assad Bridge, many Syrians echoed his displeasure in interviews conducted through a government-appointed translator.

"There can't be a peace without a return of the land... otherwise it's surrender," said Ahmed Abdel Karim, a civil engineering student of Palestinian descent.

"I'm against it," said law student Maha Homsi. "Since the day we were born, we have known Israel as the occupier. Even if there were a peace treaty, Israel would still be the enemy."

Yesterday's government-run newspapers carried front-page previews of the treaty ceremony, but the editorials, which reflect government policy, concentrated on Clinton.

"Clinton's visit will ensure a precious opportunity for him to be acquainted with Syria's desire to achieve peace and its keenness about an effective American role that could rid the region of the danger of wars and tension," Tishrin said.

Al-Ba'ath, the mouthpiece of the ruling Ba'ath Party, said: "Overcoming gaps is not an unattainable matter."

In a front page "frank letter" to Clinton, Al-Ba'ath editor Turki Sakr, said Syria had chosen peace as a strategic option and not as a political maneuver.

"We will not put impossible demands and will not reject the objective requirements of peace. We simply want the return of our land and we do not think that any people could bargain on their lands."

He did not outline "the objective requirements of peace."

Sakr also expressed the hope that the visit would help further improve Syrian-US ties.

"You come to Damascus in the name of peace. Damascus and its people welcome you... You will find in Damascus deep love for peace and a real desire for progress towards the just and comprehensive peace which could last," he said.

"We hope your new meeting with our leader and president, Hafez Assad, will lead to improvement in bilateral relations and progress towards the just and comprehensive peace."

Mortar attack overshadows ceremony

DAVID RUDGE

MORTAR shells fell in the Galilee panhandle yesterday afternoon, sending thousands of residents scurrying for bomb shelters and security rooms – minutes before the signing of the peace treaty in the Arava.

Those watching their television screens at the time suddenly saw messages instructing them to switch to an emergency channel, while vans with loudspeakers drove through the streets sounding the alarm.

The shells fell on open land in the region, causing no casualties or damage.

Nevertheless, many residents, including schoolchildren, spent nearly three hours in shelters and security rooms before it was considered safe to step outdoors again.

At first it was thought that Katyusha rockets had exploded in the area, but it turned out the blasts were caused by bursting mortar shells – adding a new dimension to the seemingly ever-present threat from the Lebanese side of the border.

No organization had by last night claimed responsibility for the sudden and totally unexpected attack.

Lebanese analysts, however, said it appeared to have been the work of elements of the Islamic Resistance, the fighting arm of Hizbullah, or one of its affiliated groups, the Believers' Resistance.

The latter announced earlier this week it was joining Hamas in the efforts to force Israel to release detained Islamic leaders, especially Hamas spiritual head Sheikh Ahmed Yassin, regional Hizbullah chief Sheikh Abdel Karim Obeid, and the Believers' Resistance's own leader Mustafa Dirani.

Dirani, who held missing IAF navigator Ron Arad before handing him over to pro-Iranian elements in Lebanon, was himself snatched by IDF commandos from his home in northern Lebanon earlier this year.

Hizbullah officials, headed by the organization's secretary general Sheikh Hassan Nasrallah, were reportedly given clear instructions by the Syrians to curb all operations for the duration of US President Bill Clinton's visit to the region.

Whatever else, the attack yesterday was a clear violation of the understandings brokered by the Americans among Syria, Hizbullah, and Israel which ended Operation Accountability last summer.

The incidents began in the morning with long-range attacks on an IDF position in the Ali Tahr region, in the central sector of the zone and on SLA outposts in the Rehav and Aishiyeh areas in the eastern sector.

There were no casualties among either the IDF or SLA troops.

The return fire, however, was moderate and apparently designed not to cause an escalation in the region.

A short time later, two separate salvos of what were at first reported to be Katyusha rockets were fired from north of the zone.

UNIFIL sources said some fell near a Finnish position of the international peacekeeping force in the Taibeh region, some three kilometers north of the international border.

The remainder crashed into the Galilee panhandle, sending residents in the region scurrying for cover.

It is believed the mortars used were 120 millimeter, types which have a range of around nine kilometers and are generally more accurate than Katyusha rockets.

IDF and SLA gunners fired toward the positions of the attackers, but again the response was restrained.

Reports from Lebanon said IAF warplanes flew dummy sorties over virtually all parts of south Lebanon immediately after the attack on the Galilee, but without blasting any targets.

Later in the afternoon, gunmen fired anti-tank missiles at another SLA position in the eastern sector of the zone, but again without causing any injuries or damage. IDF and SLA gunners returned fire.

Last night, a tense quiet reigned along the northern border and inside the zone, with IDF and SLA troops on maximum alert.

The shooting yesterday followed Katyusha rocket and mortar attacks on the Galilee over the weekend, which Hizbullah said was in retaliation for the killing of seven Lebanese civilians last week in IDF and SLA shelling.

mentalist terror.

In a statement carried in Lebanese newspapers, Hizbullah accused the US administration of launching a media and political campaign against Muslim Arabs, in cooperation with the "Zionist enemy."

Hizbullah charged that the campaign, "under the cloak of fighting terrorism," was in fact aimed at destroying "our legitimate rights, including our self identity."

"The true face of the peace process has been exposed," the statement said. "This well-coordinated campaign seeks to cover the Zionist crimes and equate resistance with terrorism to put more pressure on regional politicians and exert more concessions from them."

Hizbullah said the US, in collaboration with Israel, is trying to divide Arabs and instigate an internal war.

"By portraying the Islamic Arab nations and peoples as being divided between terrorists and peace lovers, they are trying to provoke an internal war," said the statement.

Hizbullah called on all Lebanese "national and Islamic forces, and Palestinians" to participate in the mass demonstration in Beirut to protest against the signing of the peace accord.

The head of the Shi'ite supreme council in Lebanon, Sheikh Mohammed Shemseddine, rejected charges that the Islamic resistance, the fighting arm of Hizbullah, was a terrorist organization.

"We are mourning our civilians killed by illegal weapons fired by the Zionists as [US President Bill] Clinton is touring the region, and he keeps equating the Islamic resistance with terrorism," Shemseddine was quoted as saying in Lebanese newspapers.

"We don't accept these insults," he said. "We are not terrorists. We are just defending ourselves and our dignity."

Despite Syrian messages to Hizbullah to curb operations in South Lebanon for the duration of Clinton's visit, gunmen attacked South Lebanese Army positions in the Soujoud and Ghazlan areas in the eastern sector of the security zone yesterday.

Several mortar rounds fell near the positions, although there were no reports of casualties among the SLA troops. SLA gunners returned fire.

CAN HAFEZ ASSAD BE TRUSTED?

AN OPEN LETTER TO PRESIDENT CLINTON:

We welcome you to Israel - but please do not ask Israel to give up its vital national security in the Golan Heights.

Mr. President, when you meet with Syrian dictator Hafez Assad, we hope you will keep in mind Syria's record of violating international agreements that it has signed:

* Syria's Commitment to Limit its Forces in Lebanon: VIOLATED

In April 1976, Syria and Israel agreed to the "red line understanding," according to which Syria would not send into Lebanon more than one brigade of soldiers, and no missiles or aircraft. Syria has violated all three of these promises.

* Syria's Commitment to Withdrawal from Lebanon: VIOLATED

In the Riyadh-Cairo accords of 1978, the Fez Declaration of 1982, and the Ta'if Accord of 1989, Syria promised to remove its occupation forces from Lebanon - yet it has broken all three of these accords, by refusing to withdraw its 40,000 troops from Lebanon.

* Syria's Commitment to Shut Down Terror Bases: VIOLATED

In 1987 and 1992, Syria signed agreements with Turkey, promising to shut down facilities in Syria that were being used by the PKK, a Kurdish anti-Turkish terrorist group. But the Syrians never shut them down.

* Syria's Commitment to Prevent Hizbullah Attacks: VIOLATED

In July 1993, Assad promised Secretary of State Warren Christopher that he would prevent Hizbullah rocket attacks by terrorists based in south Lebanon. But the attacks have continued.

* Separation of Forces on the Golan Heights: HONORED

This agreement, made in 1974, has been observed until today, thanks to the presence of the IDF on the Golan Heights, 55 km. from Damascus.

Mr. President, we hope you will recall the statement by the late Anwar Sadat, that Hafez Assad's word could not be trusted, that it "was, in fact, 1001 words."

And we hope you will remember the promise made by your predecessor, President Gerald Ford, to give "great weight" to Israel's need to retain the strategically vital Golan Heights. Unlike dictators, democratically elected presidents are expected to honor the commitments of their predecessors.

'Let this be an end to war'

Prime Minister Rabin's speech

The speech of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

"Happy holiday. Happy holiday to the people of Israel; happy holiday to the people of Jordan. Let this be an end to war, violence and hostility. And let us know no more war."

"Your Majesty King Hussein the First, President Clinton, President Weizman, the foreign ministers of our countries, distinguished guests from all over the world, the people of Jordan and Israel."

"From this podium, I look around and I see the Arava. Along the horizon, from the Jordanian side and the Israeli side, I see only a desert. There is almost no life here. There is no water, no well, and not a spring — only mine fields."

Peace with Jordan

"Such were the relations between Israel and Jordan during the last forty-seven years: a desert. Not one green leaf, no trees, not even a single flower."

"There comes a time when there is a need to be strong and to make courageous decisions, to overcome the mine fields, the drought, the barrenness between our two peoples."

"We have known many days of sorrow, you have known many days of grief — but bereavement unites us, as does bravery and we honor those who sacrificed their lives. We both must draw on the springs of our great spiritual resources, to forgive the anguish we caused each other, to clear the mine fields that divided us for so many years and to supplant it with fields of plenty."

"For nearly two generations, desolation pervaded the heart of our two peoples. The time has now come not merely to dream of a better future — but to realize it."

"Leaders should clear the path, should show the way, but the road itself must be paved by both peoples. I don't believe that we would have reached this great moment without the desire for peace in the hearts of both peoples: in the hearts of the soldiers and the intellectuals, in the hearts of the farmers and of the lorry drivers who drive through the Arava highways in Jordan and Israel, in the hearts of teachers and of the little children."

"Both nations were determined that the great revolution in the Middle East would take place in their generation."

"From this podium, I look around and I see the Arava — and I see you: Our generation and the next, we are the ones who will transform this barren place into a fertile oasis. The drab browns and dull grays will burst forth in living vibrant greens."

"Your Majesty, peace between states is peace between peoples, it is an expression of trust and esteem."

"I have learned to know and admire the quiet and the smiling power with which you guard your nation and the courage with which you lead your people. It is not only our states that are making peace with each other today, not only our nations that are shaking hands in peace here in the Arava. You and I, your Majesty, are making peace here, our own peace, the peace of soldiers and the peace of friends."

"President Clinton, thank you for your tremendous support throughout the entire process, which was vital for the achievement of this final result."

"I would like to thank many others on the Israeli side, on the Jordanian side, that worked very hard — day and night — that we will be allowed this great moment. The foreign minister of Israel, the head of our team, Elyakim Rubinstein; Ephraim Halevy, and many others that no doubt contributed a lot to this great achievement. As dawn broke this morning and a new day began, new life came into the world — babies were born in Jerusalem. Babies were born in Amman. But this morning is different."

"To the mother of the Jordanian newborn — a blessed day to you. To the mother of the Israeli newborn — a blessed day to you."

"The peace that was born today gives us all the hope that the children born today will never know war between us — and their mothers will know no sorrow."

"Allow me to end by the simple words: Shalom, Salaam, Peace."

US President Bill Clinton claps as Prime Minister Rabin and King Hussein clasp hands.

'Moment of achievement, pride and relief'

Excerpts from the speech of Jordan's King Hussein.

"It is with a sense of enormous pride, a sense of fulfillment, that I stand here before you today, together with President Clinton, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, President Weizman, and all our distinguished colleagues and friends."

"We will always cherish the memory and honor all those who have fallen over the years, from amongst all of our peoples. I believe they are with us on this occasion and at this time as we come together to ensure, God willing, that there will be no more death, no more misery, no more suspicion, no more fear, no more uncertainty of what each day might bring as has been the case in the past."

"Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and I had the honor of signing the Washington Declaration with President Clinton, our partner and our friend, and we took it upon us ... to shepherd the process of negotiations to a successful conclusion. I believe that both of us share in this moment of achievement and pride and relief, for hopefully we have contributed toward a better future of our peoples for all times to come."

"The prime minister of Israel, the prime minister of Jordan, will shortly ratify the peace treaty between our two countries. This will be witnessed by President Clinton. In a matter of days, we will have completed in Jordan the passage of this peace treaty through the legislature."

King Hussein's speech

"I know it is supported by the overwhelming majority of our people, who have learned today of its passage through the Israeli Knesset by an overwhelming majority. These are moments in which we live the past and the future. This great valley in which we stand will become the valley of peace, and when we come together to build it and to make it bloom as never before, when we come to live next to each other as never before, we will be doing so, Israelis and Jordanians together ..."

"This is peace with dignity, this is peace with commitment, this is our gift to our peoples and the generations to come."

"It will not be simply a piece of paper ratified by those responsible, blessed by the world. It will be real, as we open our hearts and our minds to each other, as we discover a human face to everything that has happened ..."

"All of us have suffered for far too long. President Clinton, you have been our partner, you have been our friend, you have given us your support, together with the administration of the United States of America. You are at the helm during these historic moments. We will always remember the warmth of your welcome to us both in Washington and the warmth of the welcome of the people of the United States of America with which they received our news and lauded our achievements. "No one will ever forget this day and in particular we will always remember the fact that you personally came to be with us here on this most happy of occasions at the end of a chapter of darkness and the opening of a book of light."

"God bless you and give you ever future success and maybe the word needs some good examples ..."

"Behind us here you see Eilat on Akaba, the way we have lived over the years, in such close proximity unable to meet, to visit each other, to develop this beautiful part of the world. No more, as we look into the future beyond this point with determination, with hope, with commitment. We survived the hard times."

'Peace — no longer a mirage'

President Clinton's speech

Excerpts from US President Bill Clinton's speech.

"We celebrate the history and the faith of Jordanians and Israelis. But we break the chains of the past that for too long have kept you shackled in the shadows of strife and suffering."

"We celebrate the efforts of great leaders who saw the bright horizon of this dawn, even while the darkness lingered. This vast bleak desert hides great signs of life. Today we see the proof of it, for peace between Jordan and Israel is no longer a mirage. It is real. It will take root in this soil. It will grow to great heights and shelter generations to come."

"I say to the people of Israel and Jordan: Now you must make this peace real, to turn no-man's land into every man's home, to take down the barbed wire, to remove the deadly mines, to help the wounds of war to heal."

"Open your borders, open your hearts. Peace is more than an agreement on paper. It is feeling, it is activity, it is devotion."

"The forces of terror will try to hold you back. Already they take deadly aim at the future of peace, and in their zeal to kill hope and keep hatred alive, they would deny all that peace can bring to your children. We cannot, we must not, we will not let them succeed."

"Here in the great Rift Valley you have bridged the tragic rift that separated your people for too long. Here in this region, which is the home of not only both your faiths, but mine, I say: 'Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall inherit the earth.'"

First-day postal covers sell out

JUDY SIEGEL

TENS of thousands of first-day covers with the Israel-Jordan peace stamp were snatched up yesterday at post office branches around the country. Supplies of the NIS 3.50 stamp, showing a road sign leading to the path of peace, ran out by afternoon, forcing the Postal Authority to bring in additional stamped envelopes."

Albums with the first-day cover were presented to President Bill Clinton, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Jordan's King Hussein following the signing ceremony. The stamp was also presented to those attending the Arava ceremony and to 1,000 journalists who arrived for the event."

The first Israeli peace stamp was issued in 1979 to mark the Israel-Egypt peace accord. Last August, a stamp marking the "peace process" was put on sale. The Israel-Jordan peace stamp was designed by Ronen Goldenberg of the Bezalel Academy of Art in Jerusalem."

People who still want the envelopes will be able to order them at post offices or by calling the toll-free number 177-022-2121."

Meanwhile, the Postal Authority boasted yesterday that it had delivered 2,000 of the invitations to the ceremony within a very short time, using a fleet of messengers."

UNDERGROUND JERUSALEM

Spend a day away from it all, on one of Shorashim's entertaining and enlightening, English speaking trips, sponsored by The Jerusalem Post-Traavel Club. Included are visits to the Rabbimic Tunnel (Minaret Hakotel), the Warren Shaft, a Herodian mansion and the Southern Wall excavations. Authoritative explanations and background information from guide Naomi Miller. The tour includes transport from and return to Tel Aviv, and entrance to all sites. FOR Ya'acov Edelstein, a Jerusalem resident who spent 11 months in 1949 as a prisoner of war in Jordan, the peace-signing ceremony he saw unfold on his television set yesterday was something only a novelist could dream up.

"I saw before me the images of 1948," Edelstein said. "The hate, the desire of the Arab Legion to tear us into pieces. And now, all of a sudden, there is peace. It's Kafkaesque. People who killed one another are now hugging each other."

Edelstein was 22 when Kfar Etzion fell during the War of Independence. Of the 150 people on the kibbutz, only four survived. He was the only person who was not injured during the months of fighting."

"I'm not sure this peace treaty brings things full circle," Edelstein said. "I am not sure that the hatred I saw from the other side is over. From what I hear from our reporters in Amman, the peace is not being felt there in the streets."

"Edelstein, diplomatic reporter for the National Religious Party daily Hatzofeh, said that even as peace is being signed, it is important to remember the past, not only look to the future. "The past teaches us that we must be careful to preserve the peace, so that the cruelty of war does not recur."

Edelstein said his treatment as a POW varied from time to time. "The first three months were very difficult," he said. "We were beaten, there was not enough food. But after that we received money from the Red Cross, and with this money we were able to buy food and bribe the guards. This made things a lot easier."

The approximately 700 Jewish prisoners, from Jerusalem, Gush Et-zion, Latrun and Naharayim, were at first spread out at different prisons in Jordan, but later brought together at one prison camp on the Jordanian-Iraqi border. Edelstein said he would like to visit the prison in Amman where he was held for part of the time. "I'm just curious to see it again," he said.

"When I was in captivity I never imagined that we would ever sign a peace treaty," said Edelstein. "But even then there were rumors among us that meetings were taking place with King Abdullah."

Asked if he agrees with Prime Minister Rabin's characterization of yesterday as a "happy holiday," Edelstein said, "I agree that it is a historic day, but I can't forget the images of the massacre in Gush Etzion. It is difficult for me to say that I felt like dancing, because the happiness now is mixed with the pain of the past. I can't forget the past."

The deal with Syria

It can be safely assumed that President Bill Clinton would not be going to Damascus today had he not been assured that Hafez Assad would make a gesture which would justify the trip. There may be no breakthrough in the sense that Syria will substantially change its positions, but, as the New York Times suggested yesterday, the talks between Israel and Syria may be elevated to the foreign minister level.

The remaining disagreements between Syria and Israel are relatively minor. Israel has signaled its readiness to withdraw from the whole Golan, and Syria has hinted that it would be willing to consider normalization. The points of contention are mostly of timing. Israel wants normalization to precede withdrawal, and it wants the evacuation of the Golan to be drawn out over a few years. Syria would like a quick withdrawal, which would precede any discussion of normalization.

What is most disturbing is the internal contradiction in Israel's position. On the one hand, the government says true peace would render the Golan strategically unimportant. On the other, it is preoccupied with the kind of security arrangements which make a mockery of its talk of true peace.

Between neighbors like the US and Canada, or Belgium and Holland, the control of strategic heights is irrelevant. But even if the element of religious fanaticism in the Arab-Israeli conflict is ignored, and Syria's territorial claim to all of Israel is disregarded, the establishment of such neighboring relations between a democracy like Israel and a dictatorship like Syria would be unthinkable.

In the absence of such relations, the possibility of war must always be taken into account. And as long as this possibility exists, forfeiting strategic assets by Israel, the repeated victim of wars, is incomprehensible.

One of the security arrangements the government wants is the stationing of American troops in the Golan. Secretary of State Warren Christopher has already expressed American willingness to accede to such a request. And in an attempt to assuage anxieties both in the US and Israel, he has made light of the commitment by comparing it to the benign participation of American military personnel in the Multinational Forces and Observers (MFO) in the Sinai.

Advocates of withdrawal from the Golan like to compare it with Israel's withdrawal from Sinai. But two studies of the plan to station American forces in the Golan - one Israeli, by Dore Gold of the Jaffee Center for Strategic Studies, and one American, by the Center for Security Policy in Washington (excerpted in yesterday's European edition of the Wall Street Journal) - show that the comparison is false and misleading.

The Sinai is a 200 km.-wide desert which separates Egyptian forces from Israel's Negev desert. Changes in Egyptian deployment would be immediately discernible by a monitoring force, and Israel would have ample time to take counter measures. The Sinai provides neither topographic nor geographic advantages to an attacker. On the contrary, for troops moving from the Egyptian center it is a natural obstacle.

The Golan is precisely the opposite. Its possession gives a huge advantage to an aggressor. To demilitarize it is meaningless; it can be traversed by tanks in a couple of hours. Strategically, it dominates all of northern Israel and, unlike the Sinai, it is close to concentrations of terrorist groups.

An American contingent stationed there would serve as a deterrent only if it is a large enough force to play a defensive, rather than a purely monitoring, role. As former US secretary of defense Les Aspin warned, it would take at least a division (one tenth of all American forces) to make such a force credible. And, unlike the American participation in the Sinai MFO, it would be the linchpin of an Israeli-Syrian security arrangement. American participation in Sinai was mostly a gesture. In the Golan it would make or break the agreement.

Gold reaches the conclusion that "the presence of a large American force on the Golan Heights would, in the final analysis, be disadvantageous for Israel's security." He does not touch on the political implications of such an arrangement, but the harm it could cause to US-Israel relations is inestimable. The very thought that American men would have to risk their lives in Israel's defense is enough to send shivers through believers in American-Israeli friendship. The arrangement would turn Israel from a respected ally to a despised protectorate.

From an American viewpoint, the case against stationing troops in the Golan is made most persuasively by the four retired generals, two retired chiefs of naval operations, and five former high Pentagon officials who composed the Center for Security Policy study.

They include General John Foss, former commanding general of the Training and Doctrine Command, whose earlier command included the Sinai MFO; General Al Gray, former commandant of the US Marine Corps; Admiral Elmo Zumwalt, former chief of naval operations; Eugene Rostow, former director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency; and former assistant secretary of defense Richard Perle.

Their conclusions are that the effect of deploying American troops on the Golan "could be negative for Israel's security and regional stability, while the consequences could include the loss of US lives and, possibly, a credibility-damaging retreat of the US forces under terrorist fire... such a deployment would increase the danger of direct US involvement in a future Middle East war and undermine Israel's standing with the US public as a self-reliant ally."

If pronouncements by Christopher and various Israeli officials are to be taken at face value, a deal with Syria, which includes the stationing of American troops and total Israeli withdrawal, is in the making. It is urgently recommended that both governments examine the studies on the consequences of such arrangements before their headlong rush to make a deal with Syria places both Israel and the US in an untenable, irreversible, and tragic situation.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SHULAMIT ALONI'S PAST

Sir, - Further to Shulamit Aloni's splendid attack on Orthodox during her honorary doctorate award from the Reform Hebrew Union College, I recall when Aloni (then Adler) came to England in the 1950s to teach Hebrew at my school, Whitingsham College, in Brighton.

Whitingsham College was then a famous all-Jewish school, with excellent secular studies. But its teaching of Judaism was nonexistent, and Mrs. Aloni, who was famed even then as a forceful advocate for a dejected secularism of the highest degree, found a comfortable niche under the headmaster and founder, Jacob Haievi.

As a result, during the 40 years of its existence, most of the school's

LARGE FAMILIES

Sir, - The relationship that Nery Gross sees ("Bombs and weapons," October 14) between large families and the "biblical" tenacity of "settler women" is neither valid nor consistent. As in Hebron, there are families of eight, 10 and 14 children in Har Not, Bnei Brak, Katamon, Chicago and Baltimore, and other places where there are no police truncheons, just Jews who believe in Psalm 128, that children are a blessing. King David's words preceded those of Adler and Freud and are apparently more enduring.

MENTAL PARALYSIS

Sir, - When Rabin recently said in the Knesset that he had changed his mind about fundamental issues like Syria and the Golan, the Post called that an "honest admission." True, but it is also a solid reason to demand new elections or at least a referendum.

How can a people tolerate a leader elected on platform A who then switches to platform B? That Rabin has a concept of leadership which leans far more towards being the unquestioned, dictating commander than the democratic "servant of the people" is obvious. But why should

HAREDI DEMONSTRATION

Sir, - Your coverage of Saturday night's demonstration in Tel Aviv (October 23) was entirely justified. The rally of 40,000 deserved every inch, the headline, the front-page photograph. Why then did a rally of 50,000 in Jerusalem the night before receive only one and a half inches in your News in Brief section?

The desire for peaceful streets on the Sabbath motivated 50,000 people to demonstrate on their day of rest, without the resources of motorized transportation, megaphones or video screens. Don't we deserve to read a comment from the organizers, or a response from a city official? Can't we get some background? I appreciate the lack of a photograph, owing to the religious sensitivities of the demonstrators, but why page 2?

DELUSION

Sir - The term "Peace Now" is a very apt one, for it implies that whatever peace we have is only for now. We are giving up our country to gain pieces of paper which we all know have no real meaning to anyone in the Arab world. Pieces of paper are never respected. Land is.

DELUSSION

These agreements are like promises given by abusive husbands to their battered wives. The men agree to act nice for a given period of time. But we all know that it's just a matter of time before these women are battered again.

Anyone who thinks this "peace" will last is a naive and self-delusional.

Thursday, October 27, 1994 The Jerusalem Post

The best show in town

ABBA EBAN

It may seem churlish to indicate clouds on a promising horizon so soon after the signing of the Israel-Jordan treaty - but if not now, when?

The truth is that relations between the three leaderships - Israeli, Jordanian and Palestinian - should be more harmonious and confident than they are. The peace process is too fragile to bear the weight of antagonisms in central issues.

Israelis should read King Hussein's observations on the Palestinian problem with candor and realism. The Jordanian monarch, a master of Arabic, uses it with precision. He has made it clear that he would not be signing a peace treaty with Israel this week if the PLO had not released him from responsibility for the Palestinian cause by signing the Declaration of Principles.

Since Arafat's initiative paradoxically sent Israel's international status rocketing upward into universal acceptance, our leaders should avoid the impression that they regard the Palestinian sector of the negotiation with aversion or distaste. There is no Israeli interest in aggravating Jordanian-Palestinian tensions.

King Hussein's reiteration of the doctrine that the PLO is "the only legitimate representative of the Palestinian people" resounded in a parliamentary chamber which contained almost as many Palestinians as Jordanians. Whether we like it or not, Israeli statesmanship stands in the center of a triangular relationship. Whatever structure emerges in the future, there are always going to be three, not two, parties in this complex equation.

ALL THREE of them could do with a deeper understanding of this. Political parties that praise the Jordanian treaty and curse the Palestinian accord are living in a dream world. Israeli, Jordanian and Palestinian leaders are climbing a high mountain, tied together inextricably. Geography, history and mutual interests give them no escape from the dictates of their proximity. No Israeli interest is served by delaying further progress in putting the Declaration of Principles into effect.

Our region may have outlived its quota of spectacular summits, but one that President Clinton might well mediate would be between Israeli, Jordanian and Palestinian leaders, all of whom acknowledge the American role in bringing the peace process to its present phase.

It is unfortunate that the Israeli opposition began this historic week with yet another proposal of no-confidence. When 32 Israelis were killed on the coastal road some years ago, the Labor party did not propose censuring the Likud government. It kept its condemnation for the enemies of peace, and proposed national solidarity for Israel.

Solidarity was a conspicuous element in the philosophy of the nation's founders. We knew that Israel could not live permanently outside the international order, which mocks the pretensions of unilateral power. We were inspired by our past without being enslaved by it. We remembered that our land was twice ravaged and its people dispersed because we sometimes gave reign to suicidal heroism which did not give survival its rightful place in the nation's priorities.

In the late 1940s, we took this experience to heart and set our nation on a road in which the opportunities outweighed the dangers. We are back on that road again.

Timely trip

ALON BEN-MEIR

PRESIDENT Clinton's decision to come to the Middle East was courageous, wise and timely. Although the visit was occasioned by the signing of the Israeli-Jordanian peace treaty, it will have far-reaching implications on the Middle East's new emerging order. The cynicism that surrounds the president's motivation notwithstanding, the president has seized a historic opportunity to further Arab-Israeli peace, which is vital to American strategic interests.

At the signing ceremony on the southern border between Israel and Jordan, the president sent a clear message to those who reject the peace that the weight of America is behind it. Nothing could leave a greater impression on friends and foes in the region than the firm words of the US president pledging to support those who make peace their strategic choice.

Clinton's coming to the Middle East is a loud, clear message to states in the region

In Amman, President Clinton served notice to Jordan's Moslem Brotherhood, who reject the peace, that their future is tied to their king's fortunes and their economic prosperity and security to peace with Israel. The appearance of the president of the US in the Jordanian parliament sent an unmistakable signal that America stands behind King Hussein and his democratic political reform efforts.

In Jerusalem, the president's sympathetic words will go a long way toward healing the wounds of a nation that has just buried 22 innocent men, women and children, victims of Hamas's latest heinous act of terror.

The Israelis will soon be asked to make major territorial concessions to Syria on the Golan, which many feel could further compromise their security. In their agonizing battle for peace and security, the Israelis will now, more than any time before, look to America for guarantees. America's unshakable moral commitment to Israel, delivered from the Knesset chamber, would reassure skeptical Israelis that their ultimate security lies in real peace, and not with territory.

IN DAMASCUS, the president will undoubtedly judge Hafez Assad's move toward accepting Israel's needs for time and phased withdrawal to achieve an agreement on the Golan. Symbolized by the president's visit himself, the US acknowledges Syria's indispensable role in achieving a comprehensive peace. Moreover, the recognition of Assad as a power player will further enhance his stature in the eyes of his own countrymen, which will allow him to show more flexibility.

The visit will greatly mitigate the fact that Syria is still listed as a state that sponsors terrorism, paving the way for the removal of that stigma. Assad made that a condition for being more forthcoming in negotiating with Israel and for his cooperation in combating terrorism outside his borders.

In Riyadh, the Clinton visit will underscore America's deep and permanent commitment to the security of the desert kingdom, guardian of Islam's holiest religious shrines. The message will not go unnoticed in either Iran or Iraq. Public support by Saudi Arabia of the Israeli-Jordanian peace, which President Clinton will clearly elicit, is particularly important. It will help dispel the growing notion among Islamists that Islam and an independent Jewish state are an oxymoron.

In Cairo, the president will meet with an important American ally who is plagued with an Islamic fundamentalist problem of his own and needs all the help he can get. President Mubarak, as the power broker between Israel and other Arab entities, has rendered invaluable service to the peace efforts, especially with the Palestinians. The president's visit could further strengthen Mubarak.

Weakened by mounting economic problems and rising tensions with Hamas, Chairman Yasser Arafat could greatly strengthen his position after having met with President Clinton in Cairo. Arafat will be expected to do a lot more to curb Hamas, especially if he returns to Gaza fortified with US financial aid.

In Kuwait City, the president will certainly reaffirm America's resolve to protect its allies. The presence of thousands of American troops dispatched to Kuwait has not only ended Saddam Hussein's intimidation of that country, but served notice that America acts swiftly when its vital interests are threatened. Visiting Kuwait also makes a clear statement about the US dual containment policy, which actively seeks to contain Iraq and Iran, preventing both from again becoming major regional powers capable of threatening their neighbors.

Cynics who accuse the president of using his Middle East trip to improve his sagging political ratings are missing the point. Could Clinton have declined the invitation and missed a historic opportunity to push the peace process forward and assert America's position and strategic interest? No, as a statesman, he could not.

The suicide syndrome

URI DAN DENNIS EISENBERG

PRESIDENT Clinton is scheduled to land in Damascus this morning. His plane will probably taxi down one of the same runways as cargo aircraft from Teheran. Aboard these military transports will be anti-tank missiles, long-range rockets, ammunition, explosives and other sabotage material.

Within hours, they will be heading by road to Beirut or Iranian-run terror bases in Lebanon's Bekaa valley. On orders from Teheran, the weapons will be delivered to the Hizbullah in southern Lebanon for use in attacks against Israeli forces, or fired into Galilee.

After consultations with Hamas headquarters in Amman, other military supplies will be sent into Gaza, either via the Egyptian border, or under it in tunnels formerly used for smuggling stolen cars and other contraband. From Gaza, the weapons will be distributed to Hamas and PLO terror groups in Judea and Samaria.

A bold attempt to send these weapons into Israel directly from Jordan was recently foiled at the Allenby Bridge, when the Israelis arrested a woman carrying an automatic weapon and ammunition under her dress.

Just how important Amman is in the terrorist hierarchy is shown by the fact that Muhammad Nazzal, a leader of Hamas military headquarters in Amman, springs from the same tribe as Salah Abdel Rahim Nazzal Souwri of Kalkilya, who carried out his suicide mission on bus No. 5 in Tel Aviv last week.

In his rush to seal the peace accord with Jordan, it seems Yitzhak Rabin forgot to ask King Hussein to close down Hamas military headquarters in Amman. Over 12 different Palestinian terrorist organizations known to US and Israeli security flourish in Damascus. American intelligence agencies are well aware of the close coordination between Hamas chiefs in Amman and Damascus, with the nerve center of the terrorist octopus being under the control of the mullahs in Iran. This link is why Washington has refused to remove Syria from the list of states which support terrorism.

THE EFFORT, verging on hysteria, to ensure that President Clinton is protected both by his own and local security forces during his Middle East tour is, at first glance, an acknowledgment of the growing power of fundamentalist Moslem fanatics wield in the region.

But the unprecedented safety net thrown around the president in Jerusalem, Amman and Cairo is specifically related to a report compiled by specialist forensic laboratories in Israel and the US over two years and currently circulating in the two countries' intelligence communities.

After careful analysis of the Buenos Aires bomb blasts which wrecked the Israeli Embassy there in March 1992 and the explosion which destroyed the Jewish community center earlier this year, the report leaves no doubt that the bombings were carried out by terrorists who blew themselves up with their victims.

Bred in Iran, a virus is sent out via Syria and injected into men and women in selected terrorist cells.

This conclusion was corroborated by Israeli technicians, who also determined that in the Afula car-bomb attack earlier this year and the bus bomb in Hadera, the same technique was used as in the devastating bus blast which killed 22 in Tel Aviv last week: suicide bombers.

There are clear signs that the orders for all these attacks came via the terror network in Syria. So did orders to blow up the Pan Am jet over Lockerbie in Scotland, an act masterminded in Damascus by terrorist chief Ahmad Jibril, who, to this day, is a guest of the Syrians. Libyan agents played only a supporting role in that bombing.

The report describes what a veteran intelligence source termed "a kind of suicide syndrome virus injected into the minds of men and women members of elite terrorist cells."

The concept of using human sacrifices in modern times for military and political purposes was the brainchild of Ayatollah Khomeini, who sent hundreds, perhaps thousands, of children with a Koran in one hand to walk over minefields during his war with Saddam Hussein's Iraq. His tanks and infantry then drove through the safe paths littered with the shattered bodies of young boys and girls.

Drugged or blackmailed individuals blew themselves up in Lebanon, killing and wounding over 400 US and French military personnel there in 1983-4.

Today, Moslem imams continue to use religion in indoctrinating chosen candidates and getting them to give up their lives to slay infidels. Potential victims, Jews and Christians, are all labeled "satanic."

As a reward for their supreme sacrifice, the suicide bombers are promised a reserved place in paradise for all eternity. Benefits, including an endless, abundant gratification of all physical needs, are spelled out in graphic detail.

Since it is virtually impossible to prevent a determined individual bent on blowing himself up with his victims from succeeding, the only sure way to eradicate the disease is to strike at its roots. Arresting Hamas activists in Judea or Samaria or asking PLO chief Yasser Arafat to "curb" them in Gaza is as futile as offering aspirin to a man riddled with cancer.

A recent visit to Jordan revealed the power of the fundamentalist movement there. Our Israeli guide warned us not to speak loudly in Hebrew when out walking, or better still, not to use Hebrew at all. If asked, we should say we came from America, Britain or Canada.

This caution proved justified, when 24-year-old US-born Dave Friedman told a fellow traveler on a bus that he was Israeli. Stabbing Friedman in the back and wounding him slightly, his attacker declared: "I don't want Israeli tourists in Jordan."

In a bid to prevent even worse incidents, the Jordanians are limiting the number of Israelis who can enter the country each day.

In Jordan, there is clearly a deep rift between the Beduin - now in the minority - and the Palestinians.

"We fear Arafat's motives," a Jordanian Beduin told us. "If you leave him give him the West Bank - why, I don't know - he will foment trouble in Jordan."

"Palestinians here are not loyal to Jordan. They support the PLO or Hamas. We know that the two groups work hand in hand on both sides of the Jordan."

"King Hussein may have to throw them out, as he did more than 25 years ago in the days of Black September. It was black for them, but a joy for us."

Loving too much is keeping me from living fully

DEAR RUTHIE

RUTHIE BLUM

Dear Ruthie,
Since my boyfriend and I separated a couple of months ago, I feel I can't go on living. My life has no meaning without him. My problem is that I love him too much.

Sadly, his love for me easily faded away. I don't know how to solve this problem. I want him to feel for me again. What am I going to do?
Desperate Dreamer
Tel Aviv

Dear DD,

You need to focus on how to forget your boyfriend - not on how to make him love you again.
The inability to let someone go usually indicates that he has been catering to a need deeper than love. Your boyfriend evoked some response within you which is now blocked.

It is the lack of the response which is making life seem unimportant, not the absence of the boyfriend. Find other stimuli that trigger this response. Another man is one possibility. Work or friendships, hobbies or entertainment are others.

time help you with your withdrawal.

Dear Ruthie,

I forgot to call my mother-in-law on her birthday this year. So did my husband. When I remembered, I phoned very apologetically to offer a belated wish. You see, millions are very important to my in-laws.

Then, after swearing to myself never to let that happen again, I forgot my father-in-law's birthday!
Again I apologized, but I'm up the proverbial creek anyway. I have all relevant dates listed in my diary, but I don't always look in my diary. What can I do to remember?
In Need of a Proverbial Paddle Jerusalem

Dear Up the Creek,
Forget the paddle. Go for a "permanent" calendar - the kind made especially for listing birthdays, anniversaries, etc. Hang it on the wall near either the fridge or the toilet - two places certain to be frequented more than once a day.

Dear Ruthie,

My boss came into the office one morning and told me that he had a very urgent job for me, a document that must be typed by noon. I was swamped with work and noon came and went, and I didn't ask about his document. When he left at the end of the day, he still hadn't given me the document. I assumed he had not finished preparing it.

That night, I received an angry call from my boss, demanding that I return to the office, where he would be waiting with the document. It was my responsibility, he said, to remind him during the day.

I won't tell you what I ended up doing, but I would like to know, for future reference, which of us was in the wrong?

Bugged by the Boss
Somewhere in Israel

Dear Boss-Bugged,

You are uncertain about your "innocence" because you were secretly relieved about not being handed the document while swamped with other work. But it was the responsibility of your boss to give you the material he needed typed.

Which leads me to the conclusion that your boss had in fact not finished preparing this document by the end of the day, and needed to have the upper hand morally in order to get you to come in after hours. Ponder that for future reference.

Letters should be addressed to:
"Dear Ruthie," POB 81, 91000 Jerusalem. (Ruthie regrets not being able to guarantee publication of every letter, but will answer every letter received.)

St. Thomas island boasts a 161-year-old synagogue, which expects to attract Jewish visitors when it celebrates the bicentennial of its founding next year. (Bullman)

Sun, fun and Jewish geography

TRAVEL

TIRZAH ARGASSI

THE name Virgin Islands doesn't have an especially Jewish ring to it - to say nothing of the US-administered islands of St. John and St. Thomas.
Nonetheless, these islands, located some 1,760 kilometers southeast of Miami, are likely to be a prime attraction for Jewish travelers next year, as the congregation of the St. Thomas synagogue celebrates the bicentennial of its founding.

If my own recent visit is any indication, the event will provide a fine framework for vacationers eager to combine sun'n'fun with tribal mingling, while getting a spiritual zap from the exquisite 161-year-old St.
Thomas synagogue.

The 10-month bash, which runs from August '95 through June '96, includes events that range from an interfaith Succot service in October to a performance by violinist Izhak Perlman in February.

One of my favorite memories of the trip, in which I was the guest of the board of tourism, is of a morning spent on a palmfringed, powdery white beach. It was all blue sky and dazzling turquoise sea, that more than lived up to travel poster promises.

St. John, just 7 1/2 kilometers by ferry from the more developed St. Thomas, is a model of eco-tourism. Two-thirds of the 37 square kilometer island is a national park, and much effort is made to maintain its forests and bays as they were when discovered by Columbus in 1493.

Camping is big on St. John. Maho Bay and Harmony, eco-resorts which actually upgrade the environment, are creating a buzz in the tourist trade. Their New York-based owner, Stanley Selengut, says his dedication to the venture can be traced to his do-right Jewish upbringing. He even wants to start a similar resort in Israel.

Of the many recycling and solar-powered innovations that he pointed out, the most impressive was a sturdy building beam made of "Timbrex" which consists of plastic bags bonded with sawdust. It seems the perfect use for all those discarded bags blowing in the winds of the Holy Land. The resort is also cheap, with double occupancy in one of its tent-cottages, a sort of screened-in porch with kitchen facilities, for only $60 per night, outside the December 15-April 30 high season.

Nonetheless, I was glad to be staying at the island's gorgeous, if less politically and ecologically correct, Hyatt Regency Resort (double rooms for $175 and up). The resort will offer kosher facilities during the bicentennial. On St. Thomas, the Sapphire Beach (where children 12 and under stay, eat and get day care free) has suites with full kitchen facilities, starting at $175.

Both St. John and St. Thomas are duty-free havens. The main sport of most tourists who pour off the cruise ships that stop at St. Thomas is shopping in downtown Charlotte Amalie. Liquor (especially rum) and jewelry are the best buys.

St. Thomas also boasts a branch of the Eilat-based Coral World. General manager Eitan Levy, a South African-born Israeli, agrees that the underwater life in the Virgin Islands is less spectacular than that of the Red Sea, but the impressive marine park presents exotic creatures in a magnificent setting.

Meanwhile, Jewish grandmother Rhoda Tillet sees to the island's needs for high culture by organizing chamber music concerts, with an international list of artists, in the Tillet Gardens arts and crafts center.

On a more down-to-earth level, almost every drop of water on the islands is supplied by an Israel Chemicals desalination plant. It's a profitable venture, with water costing 1 cent a gallon or "5 cents a flush."

Aside from trips up to lookouts such as Paradise Point, overlooking the busy harbor and islands in the distance, the most pleasant sight I saw with my energetic guide, Gloria Gumbs, was Seven Arches Museum, a lovingly restored 19th-century house. However, the Pissarro Building, in which Jewish Impressionist painter Camille Pissarro was born, was disappointing.
Hopefully the bicentennial's exhibit of his
St. Thomas art, which opens in November 1995, will present an opportunity to make this lovely stone house the museum it could be.

My sightseeing was enhanced by some vivid interfaith dialogue with guide Gumbs, a devout African-American Christian from Georgia. The greatest shocker on our itinerary was a poster in the Fort Christian Museum. Translated from Danish (the present US Virgin Islands were ruled by Denmark from 1666 until their sale to the US in 1917), the 1820 poster announces a slave auction of: "Tobias, about 28, a good servant: Absalom, about 25, strong and healthy; and Eliza, a young woman used to housework and the nursery." In 1848, the local Governor von Scholten finally freed the territory's 27,000 slaves. His action came in the face of a slave revolt led by General Buddhoe, a former slave the governor himself earlier freed.

Until then, St. Thomas was a "breaking ground for the slave trade," said Aubrey

(Alohin) Harley, a black congregation member I met at the synagogue on Simhat Torah.

"You might say they were house-broken here," he said, estimating that some five million slaves passed through on their way to such destinations as New Orleans. And yes, said 35-year-old Rabbi Bradd Box-man, there were Jewish slave owners.

No trip would be complete without Jewish geography. Shortly after I sat down in the shul - there's no way to do this architectural gem justice in words - Rabbi Boxman introduced me to an Israeli named Pina Ginsburg. "Are you the daughter of...?"
she asked me. "Do you know...?" and we were off.

Both of us are secular Israelis, yet we teared up during the Reform service as we circled the room carrying Torah scrolls (three of which are over 200 years old.) I'll never forget waving flags together with the enthusiastic youngsters of Rabbi Boxman's Hebrew class.

"Don't tell anybody back home you saw me here," joked a ponytailed Israeli employee of the desalination plant as he hoisted up one of the heavier scrolls.

Discovering Judaism on a vacation in the Virgin Islands, who would have imagined it?

Yet it was impossible to resist this sanctified spot with its white, sand floor commemorating the days when Sephardi Jews, hiding from the Inquisition, used sand to muffle the sounds of their prayers; a custom based in turn on memories of the Exodus through Sinai, and of God's promise to Abraham that his descendants would be "as numerous as the grains of sand."

able from the Bicentennial Hotline at 1-800-

Tales of desperate lives in postcard settings

A STRANGER IN THIS WORLD,
by Kevin Canty. Doubleday. $20.
180 pp.

KEVIN Canty is the latest young short-story writer from the American West bearing obvious influences from Raymond Carver, particularly in his lean, spare, prose style.

The protagonists are usually blue-collar men and women, and they're usually at a loss with the world. Many abuse drugs and alcohol. Few know what a good relationship is (they don't normally use words like "relationship," anyway).

These stories are mostly set in the US Northwest - Idaho, Montana, Washington state or Wyoming. But when these writers depict the landscape, it's usually in stark tones. They know that lives of loneliness and desperation usually are played out amid the postcard settings.

This collection by Canty, a Montanan, is a strong one. He is especially good at drawing his characters, be they men or women, young or old. He establishes with uncanny skill a disquieting undertone of foreboding and danger, tinged by grotesqueness.

One particularly memorable story is "Pretty Judy," in which Paul, a high-school senior, becomes sexually involved with a retarded girl in his neighborhood.
Other boys had whispered that she was available, easily manipulated.
Paul is repelled, then fascinated when she not only lets him touch her, but enjoys it and asks him to have sex with her again. Then he becomes infatuated with her, and that's when the story is played out to its grim conclusion.

I also liked "King of the Elephants," about another high-school youth. Raymond, who is living in Florida with his father, a drunk. They get a call that his mother, who is estranged from his father, was found sleeping in the Washington subway. She had been institutionalized before.

Canty writes: "You see how it worked. We passed her around like the black queen in a game of hearts, the cops to the hospital, the hospital to my father, my father to me. I was the one who could not pass her on. I laid out the situation, but the hard parts of the story could not be avoided: the subway, the two-days-broken arm. They're holding her in St.
Elizabeth's now." I told him, "but she can leave anytime she wants."

There's nothing they can charge her with."

Raymond and his father drive up to Washington to rescue her.
At 17, Raymond has rescued both his parents many times, and he is tired of it. He dreams of the open road, of leaving his father on Interstate 95 and hitching a ride. He has become hardened, and his father notices. He says, "I wish I knew who you loved, Raymond."

Raymond says nothing. But he thinks, "I was just going to walk away. I was just going to let his life be his own. The next month, September, I would turn 18, which was old enough for anything."

A few stories seem forced, particularly "Moonbeams and Aspirins," in which a couple trying to save a failing marriage hook up with a blind man in a bar. They end up teaching him how to drive, something he had always wanted to do. Since one of Carver's most memorable stories is also about an emotionally lost man who learns from a blind man ("Cathedral"), this is tricky territory. I found the similarity unsettling, and the story's ending was contrived.

Canty's endings - usually abrupt, often hinting of trouble just ahead - give him the most trouble. A good story writer wants to leave the reader slightly unsettled, but his endings tend to leave too many questions unanswered.

On the whole, though, A Stranger in This World is quite satisfying. Canty's writing is fluid but seldom facile, and a dark, chilling tone suffuses most of his stories. I also liked his compassion for his characters, flawed and aching though they may be. This book merits reading, and praise.

Hijacker of Russian jet frees 2 crew members

MAKHACHKALA, Russia

Two crew members were freed on a hijacked plane in southern Russia late yesterday, leaving only the captain and the hijacker on board, said the commercial radio station Ekho Moskvy.

Russian authorities earlier gave an Azeri hijacker $2.5 million to secure the release of 26 hostages held on a plane in the wild mountains of southern Russia, security officials said.

The captain remained a hostage yesterday after the plane's 23 passengers were released.

The hijacking began Tuesday night, just after the Russian jet left Makhachkala in southern Russia for Rostov. Two hijackers armed with a grenade and a knife ordered the pilot to return to Makhachkala, where they demanded the $2 million, said Vladimir Tomarovsky, a spokesman for the Federal Counterintelligence Service.

The hijackers, who claimed to have suitcases packed with explosives, threatened to blow up the plane unless they were allowed to fly to Iran.

It was the latest in a string of hijackings in southern Russia, a hotbed of crime and unrest since the collapse of the Soviet Union.

The hijackers gradually released the passengers and crew members as negotiations with authorities continued throughout the day, Tomarovsky said.

Authorities initially identified the hijackers as ethnic Azerbaijanis, 30-year-old Asif Kuliev, who later left the plane, and 22-year-old Elton Makhich-Zade.

Special police and anti-terrorist units stood by as negotiations continued into the night.

The ITAR-Tass news agency said the Yak-40 jet had been reeled and was parked at the end of a runway at the airport in Makhachkala, about 1,500 km south-east of Moscow.

Daghestani interior ministry officials quoted by Interfax said the hijacker was not behaving aggressively. Released prisoners said he was not carrying a weapon, but was holding a parcel which he said contained explosives.

RIA news agency said relatives of the hijackers had flown to Makhachkala, a bleak town of crumbling Soviet-era concrete towers on the Caspian seashore, to try and influence the attackers.

A counter-intelligence (FSK) official said commandos outside the plane, trained to combat hijackers, had been ordered to prepare for operation Nabat (Alarm Bell), which includes storming the plane.

The Yak-40 is a short-range passenger plane and it cannot fly to Iran without refueling. Interfax said Azerbaijan is the only place where this could take place - refueling permission.

ITAR-Tass said "an anti-terrorist group is ready to storm the plane."

The Foreign Ministry asked neighboring states whether they would allow the plane to land, and ITAR-Tass said Iranian authorities agreed to receive the plane.

A spokesman for the Iranian Foreign Ministry told the Islamic Republic News Agency that Iran would spare no effort to settle the incident.

Azerbaijan refused to grant permission to land, and Georgia agreed to accept the plane, Tomarovsky said.

Makhachkala is capital of the autonomous republic of Dagestan and is located on the shore of the Caspian Sea. Rostov is about 750 km northwest of Makhachkala.

Bosnian Serbs attack UN peacekeepers

SARAJEVO

BOSNIAN Serbs attacked UN peacekeepers in northern Bosnia yesterday in a rare tank battle, a UN spokesman said.

Danish peacekeepers manning a Leopard tank returned fire immediately after being shot at by a T55 tank near the northern town of Gradacac, said UN spokesman Lt. Col. Tim Spicer.

Two other Leopards came in support, engaging in a "fairly intensive firefight" against the Serb tank and a recoilless rifle which was also deployed against the peacekeepers, Spicer said.

The recoilless rifle was "neutralized" and the tank withdrew, Spicer said. He could not say whether the Serbs suffered any casualties. No peacekeepers were hurt, he said.

The UN force in Bosnia can call for retaliatory NATO air strikes if peacekeepers are flagrantly attacked. But Spicer said that in this case, UN commanders felt the immediate return fire by the Danish tanks was the best response.

Tensions have been high in the area, as government troops have launched more than a dozen offensives recently across northern and central Bosnia. UN military officers say the strategy is to stretch the better-armed Serbs thin at a time when their fuel supplies are believed to be running low because of a cutoff of aid from their former patrons in Serbia.

UN and Bosnian government army officials confirmed yesterday that the government had scored a morale-boosting victory in one offensive, capturing a strategic Serb military base in northwestern Bosnia.

Peacekeeper spokesmen said government forces took a Serb barracks in Grabez, about eight km east of the government-held city of Bihac.

Officials of the Moslem-led government army said yesterday their forces were continuing to advance and had captured several Serb-held villages, increasing their recent gains to about 100 sq. km.

An officer answering the telephone at Bosnian Serb military headquarters denied any losses at Grabez. But other Bosnian Serb military sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said 5,000 Serbs living in the area had fled the offensive.

Paul Risley, a spokesman at UN mission headquarters in Zagreb, Croatia, termed the government gains significant, but said some Serb soldiers remained on the Grabez plateau.

The government said the Serbs used a military complex on high terrain at Grabez to fire mortars and artillery at Bihac. A UN spokesman reached in Bihac, Maj. Mohammed Bashir, said Serbs fired mortar shells at the railway station Tuesday, injuring some civilians.

In Sarajevo, authorities shut down the besieged city's tramway after machine-gun fire injured nine passengers. Police said the fire came from a Bosnian Serb position late Tuesday, but UN peacekeepers could not confirm the source.

The gunfire on the Sarajevo tramway was the first on the exposed line since Oct. 8, when one passenger was killed and 11 wounded. The tramway resumed operation in March after a two-year halt because of shelling, but it has been shut down frequently by sniping in recent months.

Police said Tuesday's gunfire came from a Serb-held part of Sarajevo. Peacekeepers said the police hindered UN efforts to investigate, however, and they implied that the shots could have come from a government-held building.

After the Oct. 8 attack, peacekeepers briefly provided armored vehicles to escort some tram cars. There was no immediate decision to resume service.

On Mount Igman, overlooking Sarajevo, peacekeepers continued efforts to remove several hundred Bosnian government troops from a demilitarized zone. The first phase of the withdrawal, on Monday, was marred by a 45-minute shootout between government soldiers and French peacekeepers. (AP)

Kennedy trades jabs with Republican challenger

BOSTON (AP) - In their first debate, Massachusetts Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and Republican challenger Mitt Romney traded vicious jabs over health care, crime and personal finances.

The near-unanimous conclusion was that neither scored a clear victory. That puts pressure on Romney to deliver a knockout blow in their final debate today if he hopes to close the lead that Kennedy - who is in the toughest race of his 32-year career - has opened in recent polls.

Romney attacked Kennedy as an advocate of an outdated liberal philosophy responsible for explosions in violent crime, out-of-wedlock births and illegal immigration. Kennedy maintained that those problems had worsened under 12 years of Republican presidents.

The senator was piqued when Romney suggested he had gotten a sweetheart deal in a Washington real estate investment.

"Mr. Romney, the Kennedys are not in public service to make money. We have paid too high a price," he said sternly, turning to face his challenger.

Romney got mildly flustered a few times when Kennedy pressed him to detail how he would reach his stated goal of universal health care, or what he specifically would cut to balance the federal budget.

Kennedy appeared shaky once after he criticized Romney for not providing health coverage to part-time workers at companies in which he has a stake. Romney retorted that Kennedy did just the same - to workers at the Chicago Merchandise Mart, which is owned by a Kennedy family trust.

Kennedy was at a loss for a moment, then said the part-timers at least had access to insurance through the company. Although they had to pay for it. After the debate, however, Kennedy staffers said the seven part-time workers all were working second jobs and had coverage through their primary employers.

After the race had been deadlocked for weeks, a poll last week showed Kennedy leading Romney 50 percent to 32 percent. The survey of 447 likely voters had a margin of error of 4.6 percentage points.

Kennedy, the fourth most senior member of the Senate, was first elected to fill his brother John's Senate seat in 1962. Romney, a 47-year-old venture capitalist and son of former Michigan Gov. George Romney, has never held elective office.

When asked by a panel of three journalists why the race is so close given Romney's inexperience, Kennedy, 62, said the public is anxious about the economy.

"With that anxiety there is a willingness to listen to simple easy answers and they're wrong," he said. "And that is the kind of answers my opponent is offering."

Experts said Kennedy's ability to avoid major stumbles might have scored him political points.

MARILYN AUGUST
PARIS

WITH her bright blue eyes, blond curls and rosy complexion, seven-year-old Any-Yolande Horowitz hardly looked like a potential threat to her native France.

But according to her identity papers issued in 1940 by the collaborationist Vichy regime, the second-grader born in Strasbourg was a "Jew. Foreigner. Under Surveillance."

Two years later, Any-Yolande, her mother and little sister were rounded up by French police, interned in a transit camp and deported to Auschwitz where they were gassed upon arrival.

Any-Yolande however is not forgotten. Her sweet, scared face graces the cover of a 1,000-page memorial album containing photographs of 1,500 of the 11,000 infants, elementary school-age children and teen-agers shipped to Nazi concentration camps. Some 70,000 Jews were deported from France between 1942-44. Only about 2,500 survived.

Published this week by the Sons and Daughters of Jews Deported from France, the album is the work of French Nazi hunter Serge Klarsfeld, who, at age eight, narrowly escaped arrest by hiding in a false-bottomed wardrobe with his mother and sister.

"These children are the most innocent of the innocent," Klarsfeld said in an interview. "They symbolize the ultimate crime against humanity. Not only were they exterminated, but all traces of their existence were also destined to be destroyed."

Retreating German soldiers did manage to destroy most administrative documents concerning concentration camp victims, and Vichy officials secretly hid or obliterated police files.

The cover-up goes on today. Klarsfeld said French archivists for months were unwilling to give him Any-Yolande's identity card.

The Memorial of Jewish Children Deported from France, costing 500 francs ($94) is the first of its kind.

Unlike Poland, where entire villages were exterminated, three-fourths of the French Jewish population survived, thanks to protection from the general population and the Roman Catholic clergy.

Klarsfeld advertised in Jewish publications in Europe, Israel and the United States, and photos trickled in from surviving relatives.

The album also lists the names, date and place of birth, address at the time of arrest and the date and number of the deportation convey for each of the 11,000 victims.

"The Memorial replaces the tombstones under which they were never laid to rest," wrote the daily Liberation.

Half of the children were arrested in July 1942, during one of the most ambitious sweeps by French police. The Germans, however, did not want the children, and didn't know what to do with them.

While their parents were shipped immediately to the gas chambers, the children were left behind in transit camps - alone, filthy, starved and sick. Berlin did not agree to their deportation until weeks later, and then only because French national police chief Rene Bousquet insisted. (AP)

Cap-Haitien: Haiti's test tube city of justice

CAP-HAITIEN (AP) - Whether they're tracking down a stolen pig or chasing a thug from the former regime, Haitians in need of a policeman face confusion.

In some places, magistrates, police officers and army soldiers have fled, in others they are ignored, and in some they still hold sway.

Then there are the US military forces who arrived in the hemisphere's poorest nation last month. Army policy, however, prevents arresting and detaining anyone who doesn't pose a threat to US forces or has not been seen committing a capital crime.

Usually, no matter whom they call, the Haitians get sent elsewhere.

"We're living a bit in fear, and there's nothing we can do for now except to protect ourselves," said Rosanne Dugue, a former mayor of Cap-Haitien, Haiti's second-largest city.

President Jean-Bertrand Aristide's success will be measured in part on the justice system that replaces the torturers and killers who enforced government authority before - the army, police and paramilitary attaches.

Cap-Haitien is being used as a test tube by Aristide and his US government backers for putting together a professional justice system, from cops to courts, in place as rapidly as possible.

The streets are being patrolled by a 50-man interim police force. It's composed of former soldiers, police officers and trainees.

Austria arrests ex-Syrian diplomat linked to Carlos

VIENNA (Reuters) - Austrian anti-terrorist police arrested a former Syrian ambassador to East Berlin on suspicion of helping to supply explosives to terrorist mastermind "Carlos the Jackal," officials said yesterday.

Faisal Summak, Syria's top diplomat in East Berlin from 1981 to 1989, was detained yesterday night while staying in a hotel in central Vienna. The interior ministry said.

It said Summak was alleged to have ordered his third secretary to give 25 kg of plastic explosives to Carlos and an accomplice to carry out a bombing in Berlin in 1983.

Summak, now believed to be the head of Syria's state tobacco industry, was the subject of an international arrest warrant.

The ministry gave no further details but the Austrian news agency APA said German authorities had already told Vienna that they wanted Summak extradited.

German prosecutors believe Carlos and his associate, Johannes Weirich, bombed Berlin's Maison de France cultural center in which one person was killed and 22 were injured.

Carlos, a Venezuelan whose real name is Ilich Ramirez Sanchez, was seized in Sudan in August and spirited to France.

VIENNA

FOR decades, official Austria ignored and even insulted Simon Wiesenthal, who for almost 50 years has lived and worked in the native land of his nemesis, Adolf Hitler.

Slowly, change is coming. Austria is catching up with other nations that have showered awards and doctorates on the man who has made a personal crusade of tracking neo-Nazi war criminals, publicizing Naziism and racism and remembering the Jewish experience as a lesson for humanity.

Last year, Wiesenthal was awarded Austria's highest service medal by President Thomas Klestil. Yesterday, on Austria's national day, state-run television will run a documentary about Wiesenthal's life, The Art of Remembrance.

But the difficulties encountered in making the $300,000 film - and the decision to schedule it in a late-night slot - show how hard it is still for Austria to confront a Nazi past it buried for decades.

Dealing with Austrian authorities "was extremely difficult," said co-producer and director, Johanna Heer.

"It would take hours to tell you everything... what I can say is that it is impossible" to research ex-Nazis in Austria, she said.

For example, files on some suspected ex-Nazis sought by filmmakers appeared to have vanished, said Heer's co-producer, Werner Schmiedel.

By contrast, Heer said, the state archive on ex-Nazis in Germany is very helpful.

The difference stems from Austria's insistence after World War

II that it was Hitler's first victim in 1938, when Nazi troops marched in.

It was only in 1991 that Chancellor Franz Vranitzky officially acknowledged that Austrians had been both victims and perpetrators in the Nazi era. A disproportionate number of Austrians served as concentration camp guards, and almost all of the nearly 200,000 Jews who lived in Vienna in the 1930s fled or were deported to death camps.

Heer's film, premiered last Sunday to a small audience invited by Vienna's Jewish Museum, traces Wiesenthal's life from birth in the far eastern reaches of the Austro-Hungarian empire to his time in Nazi death camps and later decades tracking Nazi criminals.

It includes uncomfortable scenes barely mentioned in Austrian public life today.

In 1975, then-Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, himself a Jew, attacked Wiesenthal, suggesting he was part of a "certain mafia" that wanted to besmirch Austria. Kreisky even claimed Wiesenthal had collaborated with Nazis to save his own skin.

In October 1989, Kreisky was sentenced to a fine - suspended for three years - for repeating the allegation of Wiesenthal's collaboration with the Nazis in a newspaper interview.

In the film, Wiesenthal details how he tracked Austrian policeman Karl Silberbauer, whom he believes arrested the Dutch teenager Anne Frank and sent her to the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp where she died. Officials never reacted to the tip.

Other clips show Friedrich Peter, former leader of the right-wing Freedom Party, denying that he served in an SS squadron that killed civilians.

Heer said the film is called The Art of Remembrance because "we have an obligation to learn remembrance, memory of things we did not experience."

"The art of remembrance is not only a bold one, but indispensable," said Peter Pawlowski, head of the state television religion department, which is co-producing the film along with the American Riva Light Pictures company. (AP)

European Union's drive to stabilize Mediterranean basin faces obstacles

PARIS

ALARMED at Moslem fundamentalist violence sweeping North Africa, the European Union's southern members are demanding that the EU shift its focus from eastern Europe and act to stabilize the Mediterranean basin.

France, Spain, and Italy fear a flood of refugees, growing security threats, and economic strains from instability rocking Algeria and gnawing away at Egypt and other Arab states.

They are also concerned that with Austria, Finland, Sweden, and Norway due to join in January, and a German-led drive under way to bring former communist central European states into the EU by the year 2000, the Union is increasingly looking north and east rather than south.

The European Commission took up the Mediterranean challenge on October 19 by proposing an economic and security pact with Middle East and North African countries that would more than double aid to modernize their economies in the next five years.

"There is a major imbalance to the detriment of the South and in favor of the East. It's time to reestablish balance," said EU Development Commissioner Manuel Marin, a Spaniard.

His plan calls for spending 5.5 billion ECUs ($7b.) in EU aid from 1995 to 1999 and creating the world's largest free trade zone, linking up to 40 countries and 800 million citizens, by 2010.

Spain is to host a first ministerial conference of EU and Mediterranean states, plus Jordan, next year that it hopes will lay the foundations of a pact between western Europe and its southern neighbors, most of which already have cooperation agreements with Brussels.

First, the extra money could only be taken from existing programs for eastern Europe or busting the EU's budget limits, both of which Germany and Britain would be certain to oppose.

The Union now gives twice as much aid to eastern Europe as to the Mediterranean, even including funds earmarked to support Israeli-PLO peace in the self-governing Palestinian territories.

In the four years to 1994, the EU spent 1.626b. ECUs ($2.07b.) on the Mediterranean and 3.781b. ECUs ($4.82b.) on eastern Europe.

Second, there is little consensus on how to help the Mediterranean countries. Many economists believe increasing aid to Algeria or Egypt risks enriching a small class of profiteers or pouring money into a bottomless pit.

Free-marketters say the answer is to open EU markets to exports from eastern and south Mediterranean countries, but that would increase competition with Europe's own farm produce, so Marin's plan includes safeguards on Mediterranean agriculture.

The NATO alliance and the Western European Union, the EU's designated defense arm, have both discussed what to do about security threats from the Maghreb (Morocco, Algeria, and Tunisia) and Mashrek (Libya and Egypt) area this year.

US Defense Secretary William Perry said during a visit to Spain for a NATO meeting last month: "There is no doubt in my mind that NATO needs to be looking south and paying more attention to security problems on its southern flank."

But European and NATO officials say there is wide recognition the solutions can only be economic and not military.

Third, the Mediterranean countries have little in common economically and some are not keen to be lumped together.

The advanced ones, including Israel and Morocco, have open market economies.

But countries such as Syria and Algeria still have largely state-controlled economies built on Soviet lines, despite timid recent signs of reform.

Turkey, Cyprus and Malta all have association agreements with the EU and are candidates for eventual membership.

Fourth, political differences are also bound to arise. Most of the southern Mediterranean states are not democracies and restrict human rights.

Some, such as Morocco, Syria, and Lebanon, are suspected of permitting drug trafficking on a large scale.

And then there is Libya, in diplomatic quarantine because two EU member states - Britain and France - want its nationals over the bombings of a Pan Am jumbo jet over Lockerbie, Scotland, in 1989 and a UTA DC-10 airliner over Mali in 1988. Past attempts to hold a more modest Euro-Maghreb forum have foundered on the Europeans' refusal to deal with Libya.

Yet in the light of bloody civil strife in Algeria and growing armed Islamic fundamentalist attacks in Egypt, Col. Muammar Gaddafi's thinly populated country is coming to look almost like an oasis of stability.

France, which has 1.4 million citizens of Algeria, Morocco, and Tunisia on its soil, not counting their French-born children and others who have taken French citizenship, is the most concerned about the demographic threat.

Yet German and British officials say that, when they press the French to say exactly what they want the EU to do for the Mediterranean region, the answers are often vague.

Italy and Spain are reviving a 1990 proposal for a grouping modeled on the 52-nation Conference on Security Cooperation in Europe to develop confidence-building measures for the Mediterranean area.

But many diplomats are skeptical about the value of such an exercise. (Reuters)

New or organic products growing to market

MARTHA MEISELS

FOR THOSE who want to start the day the organic way, Elite has begun importing organic coffee.

Roasted and ground for use with filters, it is marketed in a burlap bag, tied with a straw-colored ribbon and labeled "organic coffee" in Hebrew and English.

The bag contains 200 grams and retails for NIS 16.50. Its cardboard tag bears the emblem of the International Organic Crop Improvement Association (OCIA).

This certifies that the coffee is grown on special plantations, where it is completely isolated from pesticides and other chemicals.

Elite says that the high retail price of this coffee (NIS 82.50 per kilo) is determined not only by the higher cost of organic farming, but also the necessity to transport and store these coffee beans in isolation from others.

Not that nonorganic coffee is cheap these days.

One sign of the times is Elite's recent decision to sell gift packs of another of its imports, Jacobs Krönung ("Crown") Coffee from Germany. The green-and-white gift pack, at NIS 25.60, contains a 100-gr. jar of freeze-dried instant and a 250-gr. package of ground coffee for use with filters.

THE STAFF of life is also going organic.

Degant ("the bakery which made lehem kal" ("light bread") a household word - hopes to do the same with organic bread.

It is not the first such bread in the country, but it may be the first to be widely marketed.

The organic bread products with the Degant label are baked at Oranin, the regional bakery at Kfar Hahoresh.

But it lacks a national distribution network such as can be provided by Degant of Kibbutz Mishmar Hasharon. The bakery's phone number is 09-683364.

There are three organic products bearing Degant's name: sliced whole-wheat bread, soft brown rolls, and whole-wheat pitot.

I find all of them delicious, but I can't persuade most of my household to try them.

The 750-gr. sliced bread sells for NIS 6.50, while the bag with a half dozen rolls is NIS 4.90, and the package of five pitot NIS 5.75.

All are made from wheat which was grown organically at Kibbutz

For an organic jolt in the morning, Elite has begun to import coffee free of pesticides and other chemicals (left); the non-kashrut bound will find pork and poultry products in Maadanya

Mizra's new Crispy line, which includes turkey Cordon Bleu.

Dorin Frankfurt prefers her creations to hang loose - in an assortment of layered, mix-and-match combinations.

GREER FAY CASHMAN

WHILE many of today's designers favor a slim-fitting, soft, tailored look, Dorin Frankfurt still prefers her creations to hang loose in an assortment of layered, mix-and-match combinations.

Frankfurt's new fall/winter collection does include a selection of stripes and prints, but her palette is, by and large, made up of solid colors, with ample opportunity for tone-on-tone experimentation.

As always, texture, no less than style, plays a dominant role in the Frankfurt image.

Frankfurt does not entirely ignore those women who want a more defined shape to their silhouette. Though not exactly body hugging, her button-through pin-afores, paired with wide-collared, exquisitely feminine blouses, are much shapelier than the components of her layered look. Several of Frankfurt's jackets are cut reminiscent of the styling of the 1940s.

Alongside the velvets, crepes and satins is a strong and comprehensive representation of indigo blue denim, offset with self color or black velvet trims and patches.

Much of Frankfurt's inspiration comes from either modern ballet or traditional Asian folk costumes. In some cases, she has successfully fused the two.

Faithful Frankfurt followers who have purchased her bouclé knits in winters past will find them equally attractive this time around. Chenilles are also included in her knitwear offerings.

Sde Elihu in the Beit She'an Valley under the supervision of the Association of Biological Farmers. The wheat is finely ground into whole-wheat flour at the Beersheba Flour Mills on an especially slow-moving millstone, said to help preserve the full nutritional value.

Per 100 grams, the sliced organic bread has 188 calories - about the same as in the popular "light breads" on the market.

However, per slice, the organic bread is heavier. Each slice has about 63 calories, compared with 40 calories per slice in Degant's own "light bread," 30 calories in its "light halla," and 37 calories per slice in Angelight from Jerusalem's Angel's Bakery.

The organic whole-wheat bread boasts a high vitamin and mineral content, and particularly vitamin B₅ and vitamin B₆.

Degant's organic bread, rolls and pitot are already available from Hadara to Beersheba, including Jerusalem. They have not yet reached the North or the far South.

There is no English on the labels. Non-Hebrew-readers can look for green-and-brown printing on a clear plastic bag with an illustration of a window opened onto a rural scene. Degant promises to add English to the wrapper on its next printing.

Consumers throughout the country can also look for another brand of organic bread, Harduf, distributed for the past seven years by the bakery at Harduf, a kibbutz in Western Galilee (04-986-5655).

The sliced version is actually made at the same Oranin bakery which makes the organic breads for Degant. A 750-gr. sliced loaf with the Harduf label retails for NIS 6.59.

Harduf itself produces nearly a dozen types of nonsliced breads, rolls and pitot from organic flour, which sell at some branches of Super-Sol and at most of the health food shops.

The Harduf label is also Hebrew-only.

THEY'RE CALLED Reikei Matzo - literally "matzo wafers" - but they are not kosher for Pesach. They are hard, crunchy crackers reminiscent of handmade round matzo, but smaller and golden brown in color.

They are made of flour, eggs, oil, water, salt, sugar and yeast. The hexagonal box contains 12 matzo wafers, 35 calories each. The product is made by a small Tel Aviv manufacturer, Elimelech Hassida, according to a recipe from a veteran Jerusalem family.

The product is certified as kosher and parve by the Agudat Yisrael rabbinic court.

A box with a dozen matzo wafers sells for NIS 8.70 at Super-Sol and NIS 8.35 at Hypercol. Smaller boxes sell at some minimarkets and private grocery shops.

A DIFFERENT kind of crispness is characteristic of Sunfrost's new frozen chicken breast-and-vegetable schnitzels. They come in four varieties - chicken with spinach, onion, corn or mixed vegetables.

My household found them quite tasty, though there was little agreement on which flavors were best.

They are produced for Sunfrost by O.J. (Of Yerushalayim) near Jerusalem under the kashrut supervision of the Jerusalem Chief Rabbinate. The label boasts "no preservatives, no coloring, no MSG."

FOR THOSE not bound by kashrut, the kibbutz firm Maadanya Mizra has just released a line of breaded poultry and pork products called "Crispy."

breaded pork cutlets; beefburgers with a cheese topping; and turkey schnitzels.

Each package weighs 500 gr., and prices range from NIS 13 to NIS 29. The bilingually labeled Crispy line is available at Maadanya Mizra shops and other non-kosher delicatessens.

COOL IS a new line of vitamin-C-enriched juices and nectars from Pri Hu'emek. They come in a 250-ml. carton with a bendable straw attached. The flavors include pineapple, mango, apple, orange, peach and fruit cocktail.

The drinks, without preservative or food coloring, sell for NIS 1.70 per carton.

BARBIE MILK chocolate bars from Vorel Hagalit come with a free outfit for a Barbie doll, if you buy a multi-pack of three bars for NIS 9.90 or a box of small wrapped chocolates for NIS 10.90.

The Barbie dress is a style not available in stores. The offer was made possible by a commercial agreement with Clal Toys, the authorized importer of Mattel's Barbie dolls and accessories.

Unlike the trendy 'luxury' jeeps on the market, this one has got the grit

FEW associate the town of Nazareth with automobile manufacturing. But while Nazareth is hardly Detroit, it is the site of the country's only car assembly plant - Automotive Industries Ltd., founded in 1966.

After a number of years in the doldrums, Automotive is riding the crest of a comeback, thanks to the success of the M-240 utility vehicle, commonly known as the Storm (Sufo in Hebrew). Export orders are pouring in for the Storm from security forces in many African and South American countries. The plant now exports about as many Storms as it sells to local farmers, the IDF and the Israel Police.

The Storm is not competing with the trendy "fun" or "luxury" 4wd's that are flooding the world market. It has nothing in common with the Trooper or the Shogun or the Pajero or the Four Runner, to name only four of the "yuppie trucks" which ply our beaches during the summer.

The Storm is a tough, spartan 4wd, made specifically for farmers and armies. Its competition - both here and in most of the countries to which it exports - is the formidable UK-made Land Rover Defender. The latter, however, costs some NIS 30,000 more.

The Storm, introduced in 1991, was a spin-off of the Wrangler, manufactured by the Chrysler Corp. (Automotive has a link with the American company). There were a number of problems with it at first, but most were ironed out in the revamped version introduced earlier this year.

The Storm M-240 is most at home when being driven slowly and carefully in the outback.

I tested the short and closed version, which has three doors and can carry six passengers - two in front and two seated on each of the two benches fixed to the sides of the back compartment. The long version holds six passengers at the back (three on each bench). The open one has a removable top.

I also drove a civilian version. Numerous other models are custom-made in Nazareth for armies and police forces throughout the world. These have such accessories as gun racks, armor plating and windshield covers. Automotive is also developing a diesel-powered model.

Compared to the previous model, the newer model Storm has been streamlined and made as attractive as possible for the workhorse that it is. Each version of the Storm is shorter and narrower than the equivalent Defender, and it also has a smaller, rather sporty steering wheel, making it less intimidating to a 4wd novice. The Defender has a more truck-like feel.

The Storm's finish is by no means the height of luxury, but it's an improvement on the Defender, which seems to pride itself on lack of comfort and frills. The Storm sports a rev counter, while the locally made air-conditioner would not disgrace an American product. The seats can be adjusted for height. The side mirrors may be adjusted manually from the inside.

Automotive has still not taken all the gremlins out of the Storm's suspension. Chrysler's powerful, throbbing, six-cylinder, four-liter engine, which responds instantly to every nudge on the gas pedal, gives it an almost a sporty performance on a good road. But a fast ride on a bumpy road can be a bone-jarring, head-bumping experience, especially for the passengers on the back benches who do not have seat belts. To be fair, however, one is expected to drive slowly and carefully in the outback - and that's where the Storm is really at home.

The Defender - like all Land Rover products - has a permanent four-wheel drive. This gives greater stability on the asphalt, although it increases gasoline consumption. The Storm's 4wd must be engaged. However, this is done simply and efficiently, by moving the subsidiary shift stick into "4H." You don't have to come to a full stop. A bright, conspicuous pilot light will signal the change. The same move is needed to engage the "L4" (low-range option). You do not have to align to lock the wheels, nor did I need the low gear.

The Defender has more doors and more space, and is far kinder to passengers on bumpy roads. But the Storm is the 4wd that will ultimately tow the Defender out of trouble.

The combination of the astonishing wheel travel, the nose, tail and mid-body clearance, and the superb engine make the Storm king of the off-road.

For this reason the police, the Border Police, the Society for the Protection of Nature in Israel, rental firms, and a growing number of foreign security forces, are choosing the Storm over the Defender. No greater compliment can be paid to a 4wd vehicle.

Tsur proposes kibbutz debt arrangement plan

GALIT LIPKIS BECK

AGRICULTURE Minister Ya'akov Tsur proposed a kibbutz debt arrangement program yesterday, which includes the appointment of an individual to manage kibbutz debt in severe financial trouble and arranging some of them into rural residential communities (yishuvim shilati'im).

Tsur said the plan is a compromise of individual proposals submitted by the kibbutzim, the banks and the Finance Ministry. The plan is based on a previously submitted debt arrangement plan offered by accounting expert Yitzhak Swary.

The accumulated debts of all of the country's kibbutzim now stands at more than NIS 5.7 billion.

The proposal includes three possible recovery routes. The first one provides incentives to kibbutzim that return their debts within three years.

The second route calls for the appointment of an individual who will hire people from outside kibbutzim to manage their assets and to implement other efficiency measures. Tsur proposes that kibbutzim in severe debt should freeze debt repayments over a four-year grace period during which time the manager will oversee their operations.

The third option would eliminate the communal aspects of certain kibbutzim and turn them into rural residential communities.

Tsur said the third proposal primarily affects kibbutzim in the central part of the country, where the demand for land for construction purposes is high.

The minister also suggested that the kibbutzim establish a NIS 1b. assistance fund to help finance members' pensions that would be funded by the sale of land.

Ford posts $1.1b. profits

DEARBORN, Michigan (Reuters) - Ford Motor Co., riding a strong market for its pickup trucks, Mustang and Windstar minivan, reported better-than-expected profits of $1.1 billion for the third quarter.

The automaker said the strong earnings came on revenues of $30.6b., up from $24.5b. in the 1993 quarter, when it earned $463 million.

Wall Street's consensus estimate for Ford's third quarter earnings was about $759m., according to the I/B/E/S investment service. Analysts' estimates ranged from $577m. to $991m.

Ford did not experience the operational problems that General Motors Corp. did during the July-

September period, and ran most of its plants at nearly full overtime capacity.

But Ford benefited from strong production of high-profit vehicles, including the F-Series pickup truck, the redesigned 1994 Mustang and the new Windstar minivan.

The strong Windstar sales, along with continuing production of Aerostars and Mercury Villagers, allowed Ford to mount a serious challenge to Chrysler Corp.'s dominance of the US minivan market during the quarter.

Ford's Taurus was locked in a tight sales race with Honda Motor Co. Ltd.'s Accord sedan to be the nation's best-selling car for 1994, and was slightly ahead at the end of September, thanks in

Ford, which is experiencing strong sales at home and improved results overseas, recently raised its quarterly dividend by 13.5 percent to 20 cents a share. The move marked the second time this year the automaker increased its quarterly payout.

Ford said its US automotive operations earned a record $578m. in the period, compared with $333m. a year ago, and its automotive operations outside the US earned $23m., compared with a loss of $261m. in the 1993 quarter.

The automaker's results were boosted by strong earnings of $523m. in its Financial Services Group, which had profits of $391m. a year ago.

Consumption, production continue to grow

JOSE ROSENFELD

PRIVATE consumption and industrial production continued to expand in the past three months, while trade flagged and unemployment dropped further, the Central Bureau of Statistics reported yesterday.

Retail trade rose 10 percent in the past three months, while consumer durable goods imports increased by 4%, after expanding by 13% in May and June.

By contrast, overall consumer imports dropped 6.5% following sharp rises earlier this year.

Exports, excluding diamonds, fell a steep 19.7% during July through September. Industrial exports, which make up about a third of industrial production, also dropped 18%, after remaining flat in the previous two months.

Industrial machinery and equipment imports turned around, rising 11% after falling 24% in May and June. By contrast, industrial input imports, excluding fuel, decreased 4% after a 17% rise in May and June.

The trade deficit, excluding diamonds, fuel, ships, and airplanes, averaged $490 million a month, staying at May's and June's level. Industrial production grew an additional 3.2% during July and August, following an 11% jump in the preceding two months.

Cement sales soared 299.7%, following hefty increases in the previous two months.

Unemployment inched down to 7.3% compared with 7.4% in the preceding three months.

Tourism, as measured by the number of tourist arrivals by air, was flat following a drop of 16% in May and June.

Residents curtailed their travel abroad by 27.4% in July and August, following an extraordinary increase of 104% in the previous two months. Similarly, residents' local hotel stays fell 18% in the past three months.

Seasonally adjusted consumer prices increased at an annual clip of 15.5% in the past three months, following a 16.5% rise during March through June.

The currency basket rose 5% compared with 22% in May and June, while the dollar fell 3% after jumping 11% in the previous two months.

Insurance agents to MKs: Reject pension fund law

GALIT LIPKIS BECK

THE Association of Insurance Agents and Brokers yesterday appealed to the Knesset Finance Committee to vote against the Finance Ministry's proposal to extend the validity of the pension fund law until the end of March.

The law, which is valid until October 31, forbids new pension funds from purchasing special high-interest government bonds.

In a letter to the Finance Committee, association chairman Shaul Pasternak said the committee members initially signed the law for 10 months, two months less than the Finance Ministry demanded.

"Don't turn a decision on temporary legislation into a decision for continued legislation over a long period," said Pasternak.

In the letter, Pasternak refers to Migdal's and Clal's recent appeal to the High Court demanding they be allowed to purchase special bonds and set up pension funds.

In the verdict, Judge Dov Levin said the pension law is illegal, because it is against freedom of occupation laws.

Judges Zvi Tal and Tova Strasberg-Cohen ruled to reject the petition by Migdal and Clal on the basis that the pension law was passed for a limited time.

Survey: Business leaders see 13%-15% inflation rate in '94

RACHEL NEIMAN

ISRAEL'S top 50 business leaders believe the country's inflation rate this year will be between 13 percent and 15%, while next year's figure won't change dramatically, reaching between 12%-15%, according to a survey conducted by the Chambers of Commerce.

Some 57% of those surveyed support a capital gains tax, and a majority do not believe the tax will affect the capital market.

Slightly more than half of the leaders feel that peace treaties with Jordan and Morocco will affect the country's economic development.

Some 68% said they were convinced that tax reforms were suited to current market needs, while 45.5% said the latest hike in interest rates was in keeping with the market.

Some 70% said the government's steps toward lowering inflation would have a limited effect, while 25% said they would have no effect whatsoever.

'Bezek can't afford to itemize bills'

EVELYN GORDON

BEZEK cannot give free itemized phone bills to all customers because it would be too expensive, the state told the High Court of Justice yesterday.

It was responding to a petition by Zohar Polobin, who argued that it was unreasonable for the company to charge for this service.

In its response, the state said that providing this service for free would cost Bezek some NIS 40 million a year. This is too great an expense to force on the company,

Furthermore, it said, Bezek has already taken steps toward the consumer by offering itemizations of international and cellular phone calls for free, and by giving free itemizations of the entire bill to someone who complains of overcharging, if the bill in question is at least twice that person's average bill.

For all other clients, complete itemization can be obtained at a cost of NIS 3.20 per 48 calls, the response added.

Finance Ministry prepares for next US loan guarantee installment

JOSE ROSENFELD

FEARING further interest rate hikes in the US, the Treasury is making preparations to raise the next installment of the US loan guarantees.

Finance Ministry Director-General Aharon Fogel will leave next week for the US, accompanied by Accountant-General Reuven Kokelevich and his assistant, Avi Elkind, to explore the optimum timing and size of the proposed issue.

The government just raised $563 million in US loan guarantees last month at a cost of 7.82%, excluding underwriting commissions, for a period of 30 years.

The state raised the previous $1 billion in US loan guarantees in March at a lower rate of 7.23%, including underwriting costs. Moreover, a year ago, the government was able to borrow at 6.38%, reflecting the steady increase in US long-term interest rates.

Israel can only raise next year $1.784b. out of its $2b. US loan guarantee allotment, to offset $216m. spent this year in the areas.

WORLD BRIEFS

US durable goods orders up slightly: Orders for durable goods posted a slight 0.1 percent rise in September, the Commerce Department said yesterday, a second monthly increase but well under the previous month's big gain.

August orders were revised up to 6.4% jump - the strongest in 1 1/2 years - because the auto industry was churning out 1995 models after closing briefly earlier in the summer for retooling. Previously, the department said August orders had risen a smaller 6.1%.

Motorola Israel finishes chip in joint project with IBM, Apple

RACHEL NEIMAN

MOTOROLA Semiconductors (Israel) announced yesterday it had completed development of a unique microprocessor.

The Power Train Engine Control, part of the PowerPC series, is a joint project between the company and IBM and Apple. The PTEC is the first of this series to be developed outside the US.

The new chip was developed for use by Ford Motors, according to the car manufacturer's specifications, and will control engine functions, in particular exhaust emissions filters, for Ford's car of the future.

The announcement coincides with Motorola's move to its new Sha'ar Herzliya headquarters. The company invested $3 million in the building, which holds 300 work stations and a direct satellite broadcast conference room.

Maccabi TA meets PAOK Saloniki in Club Championships

JOEL GORDIN

NATIONAL basketball champions Maccabi Tel Aviv makes its debut tonight in the best-of-16 round of the European Club Championships, when they take on Greece's PAOK Saloniki at Yad Eliyahu.

PAOK has made significant changes in the squad which knocked out Hapoel Tel Aviv from the contest's preliminary rounds last month. The Greeks have replaced American Kenone Lampley with Jerrod Mustaf (2.08m), formerly of the New York Knicks and Phoenix Suns. They have also received permission to field Yugoslav Fredrik Stokic, now a Greek citizen.

Nevertheless, the team's backbone is still made up of veteran national team players John Korfas and the second Yugoslav, prolific scorer Branslav Prelovic.

Maccabi returns to the championships after its absence last season — the first in more than two decades. The club is riding a wave of confidence, having lost only one game (to Hapoel Galil Elyon) this season. Doron Jamchee, Nadav Henefeld and Guy Goodes have all recovered from injuries and have trained with the team this week. Dual citizen Jeff Kent, however, cannot take the court because, according to FIBA rules, he has not been long enough in the country.

The game was scheduled to be televised live by ITV at 20:30, but has been preempted for US President Bill Clinton's speech in the Knesset. According to ITV, highlights will be broadcast at 23:00.

Meanwhile on Tuesday night, Hapoel Tel Aviv won its away game in the European Cup's last preliminary round, defeating Banko Brno of the Czech Republic 79-72. The Czechs led 46-37 at halftime but a sizzling second-half display by Milton Wagner turned the tables. Buck Johnson scored 32 and Wagner 26. The second leg will be held next week at Ussishkin.

Katash leads Galil to Korac Cup win

JOEL GORDIN and agencies

HAPOEL Galil Elyon, playing without Americans Darryn Daye and Terry Dozer, scored an impressive 102-83 home win over Spain's Caeres in the first leg of the third round of the Korac Cup last night.

The second leg will be played next week in Spain, and the overall victor will advance to the best-of-16 round.

The star of Galil's win was 20-year-old forward Oded Katash who notched up a whopping 37 points in a brilliant all-round game. Brad Leaf scored 22, Amir Mukari 17, Steve Malovic 10 and Erez Hazan 9.

Galil led 58-42 at halftime and only looked to be in trouble in the first minutes of the second half when the Spaniards trimmed the lead to nine points. The visitors played a robust, at times rough, game, and four of their players fouled out. American Raymond Brown was top scorer with 21.

In other Korac Cup action last night, Maccabi Rishon LeZion lost 84-72 to Greece's Panionios.

Rishon, which is the only unbeaten team in the National League, played without injured James Gully and Asaf Barnea. Calvin Roberts is still not eligible to play in European contests.

Subdued Rishon managed only a lowly 23 points in the first half (42-23 at halftime). The Israelis recovered after the break and Gerald Paddio, who scored four in the first half, managed to trim the difference to 10. But it was too little, too late, and even Paddio was not much in the end for the Greek club's brilliant Rick Bailey (28 points) and Travis Maze (24).

Rishon's best scorer was reserve Harel Bezer with 17. Paddio and Kobi Balul each sank 14.

Also last night in Odessa, Hapoel Eilat notched a 78-54 win over Bipa-Moda. Brian Rowson scored 26 and Andrew Kennedy 23. Eilat led 47-25 at halftime.

Meanwhile, an injury could force guard Doron Sheffer to give up plans to play for the national team in qualifying for the European Basketball Championship.

Sheffer missed practice for the University of Connecticut last week because of a groin injury, then returned for double sessions Friday and Saturday. But he sat out of practice again the next day.

Sheffer is scheduled to leave next week to join the national team for games in Tel Aviv and Prague. He is expected to rejoin his college team November 13.

Ravenswood saddles up for charity

DEREK FATTAL

MORE than three hundred yellow-shirted cyclists have taken to the saddle in the 3rd annual Ravenswood Biblical Bike Ride, one of the most physically grueling sporting challenges Israel can offer.

This year the sponsored charity ride that pits British participants against the uncompromising Israeli terrain has been divided into two separate five-day stages of around 420 kilometers each.

The first and more difficult phase began on October 17th near Haifa, and took competitors down the Jordan Valley, through Jericho, past the Dead Sea, culminating in a sapping ride up to the Knesset on the Burma Road.

The second stage which began on Monday on the outskirts of Jerusalem passed through the Lahav Forest, Sde Boker and the Ramon Crater. Tomorrow's final lap takes the riders from Kibbutz Yehel to Eilat.

The first hurdle participants had to overcome to qualify for the ride was to raise a minimum of £1,800 in sponsorship for Ravenswood, an English charity organization that operates a youth village, 13 residential houses as well as a community center and educational facilities offering training and recreational facilities to the physically and mentally handicapped.

Twenty-two-year old Lisa Giles and 23-year old Steven Triesman rode their tandem bike on last week's trek from Haifa to Jerusalem.

Lisa, a social worker at Ravenswood, and Steven, born with Down Syndrome, is a permanent resident at the youth village in Berkshire countryside, which has captured the affection and support of the Anglo-Jewish community.

Since March, Steven has diligently followed a special weights and cycling regime to prepare himself for the event. The biggest problem for the two riders was coordination and balance. "Steven has amazing physical strength, he somehow managed to keep us going during the hardest stretches through his sheer muscular power," said Lisa minutes after the couple crossed the finish line.

As Steven celebrated the finish, Lisa explained the boost in confidence the ride will give him. "He will go back to Ravenswood feeling much prouder, with a clear sense of achievement. In the coming weeks he'll be the center of attention, someone for the others to look up to."

Steven was one of five Ravenswood residents joining the ride this year. For many, the event took over their lives in the last half-year. Jonathan Hymen, a 47-year old dentist from Tottenham, London, took to gauging his Saab Turbo, and built up stamina and fitness by riding the 40 km round trip between his home and his practice three times a week. At the weekends he would go on longer runs, building up to 110 km rides.

The ride itself is a massive logistical operation. Six vehicles carrying water supplies follow the riders. An additional vehicle provides fruit and snacks for rest stops every 20 km. The group eats its way through one thousand bananas each day, in addition to energy bars and supplements. Three mechanics and a truckful of spare parts support the convoy, as well as an ambulance, 3 paramedics and qualified physicians.

A Sefer Torah has also joined the two-wheeled caravan.

Despite all the preparation, surprises were in store for the riders. The biggest was in Jericho last week where the Palestinian Municipality greeted the riders with a full-fledged reception in the main square. "Half the town turned out to cheer us on, with pipes and a marching band, and provided us with food and drinks," remarked Giles.

Biker to get MBE

JUDY SIEGEL

ONE of the participants can neither read nor write — but next month he will become the second disabled Brit on ever to receive the Member of the British Empire (MBE) award from Queen Elizabeth II.

Gary Jelen, now 29, was born a normal baby in London. His parents Martin and Joyce say he suffered severe mental handicap after receiving the routine anti-diphtheria shot as an infant. Such a catastrophic result of the vaccination is rare.

"At first, he couldn't walk or speak, but with much effort he learned to do these things. He understands everything he hears, but he still can't read or write," said his father, while the family toured the Alyn Orthopedic Hospital in Jerusalem recently.

Despite his disabilities, which are not visible, Gary became Britain's handicapped power-lifting champion.

His MBE is not only for his sporting achievements, but also for starting peace parks around the world, from England and Israel to Kuwait and Cambodia. Martin notes that it was difficult for him and Gary, who are Jewish, to get a visa to Kuwait last year, but they finally did after the matter was raised in Britain's Parliament.

"I want to help people like myself. I want them to see they can do things like me," he said.

Alyn Hospital invited him to plant a young olive tree near the entrance to the hospital. Although Gary couldn't read the metal plaque prepared to honor his visit, he beamed when his parents said his name would be inscribed in Jerusalem forever.

Rush reaches century in Cup play

LONDON (AP) — Ian Rush scored his 99th and 100th goals in cup competition Tuesday night to lead Liverpool to a 2-1 victory over Division One club Stoke in the third round of the English League Cup.

The Welsh international struck in the fourth and 55th minutes on a rainy night in Liverpool. Paul Peschisolidi netted in the 41st minute for Stoke.

In other games, fan trouble erupted at Manchester City's 4-3 victory over Queens Park Rangers. Crystal Palace shut out Wimbledon 1-0. Bolton defeated Sheffield United 2-1 and Millwall beat Mansfield 2-0.

In Scotland, Raith advanced to the final of the Scottish League Cup after a penalty shootout with Airdrie.

Stewards removed angry home fans from the main stand at Loftus Road as struggling Queens Park Rangers lost the seven-goal thriller against City. Supporters chanted for the resignation of the club owner and former chairman Richard Thompson, and scuffles broke out when some fans tried to force their way into the directors' box.

In the game, Kevin Gallan gave Rangers the lead after just 14 seconds. Nicky Summerbee equalized in the 37th minute, but Trevor Sinclair put the home team back in front one minute later.

Keith Curle's penalty two minutes into the second half tied it again, and Peter Beagrie, in the 54th, and Steve Lomas, in the 59th, made it 4-1. Gary Penrice netted a consolation goal for Rangers with three minutes remaining.

At Sheffield, an injury time own goal by defender Andy Scott lost the game to Bolton in a battle of Division One clubs. Scott was trying to clear Alan Thompson's free kick, but instead directed it into his own net.

Nathan Blake had equalized for United two minutes into the second half after Mixu Paatelainen's opener for Bolton in the sixth minute.

England cricket manager wary of one-day experiment

PERTH (Reuters) — England manager Keith Fletcher has cast doubt on an experimental format for one-day cricket which the tourists will try out today.

Instead of the normal two innings, England's 50-overs-a-side match against Western Australia at the WACA ground will be divided into four quarters of 25 overs each.

Fletcher's side agreed to play under the new rules following a request from the Western Australia Cricket Association (WACA).

"We've gone along with it for the benefit of Western Australia but I personally don't think it will work," Fletcher said yesterday.

"The public comes along to see one side bat for 50 overs and then see the other side go in. We wouldn't play a game like this if it was just before the more serious business of Tests and one-day internationals — it really is a one-off."

If England bats first today, it will face half of its allotted overs before Western Australia takes its turn in the middle.

The process will then be repeated, with the not out batsmen returning to the crease to continue the innings.

Fletcher said England would not change its normal tactics. They would look to score about 100 off the first 25 overs, and then attempt to score six an over during its second stint at the wicket.

He conceded that with both sides having to bat in similar conditions, it might reduce the instances of matches being ruined when sides batting first are dismissed cheaply in helpful conditions.

England has decided to rest Graham Gooch, who made 129 in the opening tour victory against the A.C.C. Chairman's XI on Tuesday. He steps down for Mike Gatting. John Crawley will open the innings.

All-rounder Craig White passed fitness test on his injured ankle and will play.

Western Australia — Damien Martyn (captain), Craig Condon, Adam Gilchrist (wicketkeeper), Murray Goodwin, Brad Hogg, Brendan Julian, Bob Kelly, Mark Lavender, Tony Moody, Bruce Reid, Jamie Stewart, Mike Veale.

Royals' Cone wins AL Cy Young Award

NEW YORK (AP) — David Cone, coming off the worst season of his career, bounced back to again beat out former teammate Jimmy Key in a close vote Tuesday for the American League Cy Young Award.

Cone, 36-5 with a 2.94 ERA for the Kansas City Royals, won the award despite not leading the league in any pitching category. Key, 17-4 with a 3.27 ERA for the New York Yankees, led the majors in wins.

Cone received 15 of 28 first-place votes and finished with 108 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America. Key got 10 first-place votes and 96 points.

Greg Maddux won his record third straight Cy Young with a unanimous victory in National League voting Monday. The American League MVP will be today.

Cone struck out 132 in 23 games before the players' strike. Key fanned 97 in 24 games.

Cone and Key pitched together for the Toronto Blue Jays for the last two months of the 1992 season. Cone, acquired in late August in a trade from the New York Mets, bumped Key out of manager Cito Gaston's playoff rotation, making two starts while Key was left in the bullpen.

Cone also started ahead of Key in the World Series. Key, however, wound up starting and winning Game 4, then was again the winner, in relief, in Game 6 as Toronto topped the Atlanta Braves for its first championship.

Both Cone and Key left Toronto after the 1992 season. The right-handed Cone, one of the most attractive free agents available, decided to go back to his hometown of Kansas City and signed a three-year, $18 million contract with the Royals. The left-handed Key, considered a lesser prize, got a four-year, $17m deal with the Yankees.

Cone, however, struggled to an 11-14 mark, his first losing record since becoming a full-time starter in the majors. And, for the first time in four years, the power pitcher did not lead the big leagues in strikeouts. Key, meanwhile, went 18-6 with his soft stuff for the Yankees.

Cone, 31, lost his first decision this season, then reeled off eight straight victories. He had pitched three consecutive shutouts and gone 28 scoreless innings before he lost to Key and the Yankees on May 27.

Swedish league bars NHL players

STOCKHOLM (AP) — An association of Swedish ice hockey clubs yesterday upheld a ban on locked-out NHL players' returning to play back home.

The Elite League Association took the initial decision last Saturday but a new meeting was called after protests by Swedish fans and reports that some clubs were rebelling against the ban.

"The association stands firm on its majority decision against allowing professionals to play," the Swedish news agency TT reported.

More than 30 Swedes play in the National Hockey League. Most have returned home during the lockout and at least a dozen had been asked to play for their former teams.

Meanwhile, players will be back on the ice for a charity game Sunday and two next month.

The Canadian Press reported Tuesday that players participating in Sunday's game at Sarnia, Ontario, will include Sergei Fedorov, Paul Coffey and Steve Yzerman of the Detroit Red Wings, and Toronto Maple Leafs captain Doug Gilmour, who will team to play the Sarnia Sting of the Ontario Hockey League.

THEATER

HELEN KAYE

CHILDREN of the Heart, adapted and directed by Tsafir Kurtsia and Guy Or from David Grossman's. See under: Love, was well received at this year's Acre Festival.

While Grossman's searing exploration into what constitutes humanity occasionally boils over into melodrama in the stage version, the play is nevertheless engrossing. It stars Ofer Shikartsi and Shmuel Segal. Tonight and tomorrow in ZOA House at 9. (Hebrew)

The Six Day War made him a hero; the Yom Kippur War turned him into a pariah. Hillel Mittelputnik's Gordish explores Israel's journey from arrogant euphoria to bewildered disillusionment through the life of Maj.-Gen. Shmuel (Gordish) Gonen.

Gonen is authoritatively played by Igal Naor, but it's Avi Kushnir's brilliant Epstein (the general's friend and sidekick) that walks away with the show. At the municipal auditorium in Beersheba on Saturday through Monday at 8:30. (Hebrew)

MUSIC

FOUNDED in 1955, the Vittore Veneziani Academy choir from Ferrara won last year's Italian Press Prize. Sponsored by the Italian Cultural Institute, the choir is touring Israel. Their programs range from liturgical music of the 16th century to our own time. Tonight they're at the Stricker Auditorium in Tel Aviv at 8:30. Entrance is free. Tomorrow they're at Kibbutz Geshar at 9:30.

The Bartholdi Trio from France are young and very talented. Two siblings, pianist Nathalie Jochor (30) and violinist Dominique Jochor (29) are accompanied by cellist Guillaume Paoletti (26). Still students under the tutelage of cellist Michael Strauss, the trio has already won prizes. They play a program of Martin, Beethoven and Schubert tomorrow at noon at Jerusalem's Mishkenot Sha'ananim.

The Tel Aviv Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Itai Talgam, begins its Talking Music series with a lecture on classical romanticism with excerpts from works by Mozart and Haydn. At the Stricker Auditorium in Tel Aviv tomorrow at 11 a.m.

DAVID Geringas continues his Israeli tour with a special recital courtesy of the Jerusalem Symphony Orchestra. Saturday (8) he performs chamber music by Couperin, Poper, Dutilleul, Schmittke and Brahms at the Henry Crown Symphony Hall in Jerusalem with Tatjana Schatz at the piano and Ina Esther Jost and Irit Assayas on cello. The chamber music weekend offering in Jerusalem.

Four held for selling IDF rifles to Gazans

BILL HUTMAN

FOUR Ashdod residents have been remanded on suspicion of selling Palestinian weapons in Gaza.

The suspects allegedly stole the weapons — 20 Galil assault rifles — from an IDF base. The four were arrested Tuesday, police sources said.

Details of the case were released for publication yesterday, when the four were remanded in Petah Tikva Magistrate's Court.

Yoram Livraty, 22, and Charlie Azraza, 22, were remanded for 15 days, and Yisrael Peretz, 40, and Moshe Ben-Eli, 22, for 10 days.

All four maintain their innocence. Peretz, a well-known Ashdod businessman, was released on NIS 10,000 bail, "because his part in the case was minor compared to the other suspects," ruled Judge Hama Efrati.

It was reported that the weapon used in an attack was found on one of the murderers of kidnapped Sgt. Nahshon Wachman. Police sources, however, said the weapon was used in an attack in Gush Katif.

"Only four of the weapons have been recovered," Efrati said. "One of those was used in a recent serious security incident, during which Israeli civilians were killed."

Police said the 20 rifles were stolen from the armory of the Tze'elim base on July 31. Peretz allegedly let the other suspects use his car in the theft of the rifles and their transfer to Gaza.

Peretz allegedly had business connections with a Gazan named "Nabil" to whom several of the weapons were originally sold.

Attorney Giora Zilberstein said Peretz, her client, was out of the country on the day the weapons were stolen, and had proven that to police. She denied Peretz was involved in any way.

"The investigation is still in an early stage," said a senior police officer close to the case. "We expect there to be more arrests in the near future."

Invasion of construction workers from Jordan expected

THE Construction Workers Union expects an invasion of Jordanian construction workers when the border opens up, union head Shlomo Dahan told a Tel Aviv press conference yesterday.

"From our point of view," he said, "workers from Jordan are no different than those from the territories or any other foreign labor. We want the government to ensure that construction returns to Israeli hands by ensuring decent wages, in addition to the

He noted that unemployment is high in Jordan, and that local contractors would prefer to use cheap labor from Jordan over either locals or workers from countries further away.

Dahan noted that he "couldn't come out against bringing in foreign workers given the current closure of the territories, but it could remain an ongoing government policy."

David Stern, honorary president of the Contractors Association and head of the Fund to Encourage the Building Trades, said the current campaign to train demobilized soldiers in construction is doing surprisingly well.

"Contrary to the contention that young Israelis aren't interested in working in the building trades, some 600 soon-to-be-discharged soldiers enrolled in courses in just one week," he said.

Environment gets peace dividends

MANAMA, Bahrain (Reuters) — Israelis and Arabs agreed yesterday on a code for protecting the Middle East environment, an agreement hailed as the first region-wide evidence of the peace dividend.

Multilateral negotiations in Bahrain on the environment and direct talks between Israel and Jordan were launched at the 1991 Middle East peace conference in Madrid.

US chief delegate Donald Bandler said the agreement on what is being called the Bahrain Environmental Code of Conduct for the Middle East showed the parallel between the two tracks of the negotiations to secure a just, lasting and comprehensive peace.

The code, endorsed unanimously by all 41 delegations at the conference, aims to promote confidence-

The Bahrain talks, like all such multilateral negotiations since Madrid, were boycotted by Syria and close ally Lebanon.

The Bahrain code includes an unprecedented agreement to work together to eradicate poverty and narrow differences between living standards across the region as "indispensable requirements of sustained development."

It sets principles such as the use of natural resources on a sustainable, fair and just basis, speaks of coordinated management policies for shared resources and tackles issues like water, marine and coastal environment, air, waste management and desertification.

The Bahrain code is the first to emerge in five sets of multilateral negotiations spawned by the Madrid process that involves virtually every Arab state. Apart from Syria and Lebanon, other absentees are outcasts such as Iraq, Libya and Sudan that have remained outside the peace process from day one.

Other codes under discussion in talks on economic development, water resources, arms control and Palestinian refugees have yet to be agreed.

Environment Minister Yossi Sarid attended the opening of the talks on Tuesday but rushed back home later in the day to be on hand for yesterday's treaty signing with Jordan. He was the first Israeli cabinet minister to visit a Gulf Arab state since the Jewish state was created almost half a century ago.

Ma'aleh Adumim Mayor Benny Kashriel re-elected

HERB KEINON

INCUMBENT Ma'aleh Adumim Mayor Benny Kashriel handily defeated challenger Rafael Ben-Hur in Monday's election, ending a markedly nasty campaign.

Both men are affiliated with the Likud, and ran on independent local lists. Ben-Hur made the centerpiece of his campaign a complaint he filed with police alleging Kashriel misused public funds.

With some 63 percent of the voters going to the polls, Kashriel took 63% of the vote, compared to 37% for Ben-Hur. Ma'aleh Adumim, the largest settlement in the territories, has some 20,000 residents.

In the race for seats on the municipal council, Kashriel's party captured six seats, Ben-Hur's three, a National Religious Party-affiliated ticket took two seats, and a Shas-affiliated ticket another two.

In the first ever elections to the local council in Karmei Shomron, the current head — Shas's Gabi Butbul — came in last in a race of four candidates. Butbul was appointed to his post by former interior minister Aryeh Dori.

Yehuda Lieberman (NRP) received 38% of the vote, compared to 23% for Likud candidate Moshe Lorboboin, and 22% for Tzomet's Yigal Lahav. Butbul took 17 percent of the vote. It is unclear whether a runoff will be held between the two top vote-getters.

In Emmanel, the other settlement in which elections were held Monday, Shmuel Lanza, who ran on an independent list, defeated three other candidates to head the local council.

Cabinet to vote on Clalit rescue plan

JOSE ROSENFELD and JUDY SIEGEL

THE cabinet is today expected to approve a rescue plan for Kupat Holim Clalit that will cost taxpayers about NIS 3.32 and transfer control over the fund's assets to the government — while leaving the management in Clalit's hands.

Before it can be implemented, the plan will require Knesset Finance Committee approval. However, the Treasury announced yesterday that the plan would not be forwarded to the committee until the fund's workers first agree to the program.

The recovery plan requires personnel and wage cuts that are to be included in the fund's three-year NIS 537 million efficiency savings from 1994 budget levels.

The government will contribute NIS 38.8 million to help cover severance pay for nearly 1,200 of Clalit's employees.

Out of Clalit's recognized deficit for 1994 of NIS 1.025 billion, the government will pay NIS 900 million, and the fund would contribute NIS 125 million in efficiency budget cuts. The Histadrut would pay the government NIS 400 million it owes the fund.

The government will also cover the lion's share of Clalit's accumulated debt of NIS 4.185 billion, by selling out NIS 2.061 billion. The fund will only contribute NIS 30 million to the recognized accumulated debt through the sale of assets.

Accumulated obligations that are not included in the accumulated debt will be shared between the Histadrut and the fund. The Histadrut will cover NIS 288 million of the workers' unfunded budgeted pensions, while Clalit will assume the obligation to cover accumulated sick and vacation pay to its employees. The fund will also assume NIS 333 million in medical malpractice claims and NIS 826 million of its current deficit, including its debt to suppliers and the banks.

The liquidation of the fund's accumulated debt will be effected by means of a court-ordered arrangement with its creditors.

The government will transfer NIS 100 million a year, for three years, to help the fund pay for equip-

In return for its contribution in liquidating Clalit's debt, the government will acquire an option to own all of the health fund's property. By only getting the option, which the government may exercise, the state avoids the problem of having the immediate responsibility for the funds' workers. As a result, the fund will continue managing the hospitals, allowing the government to stay out of running the fund's hospitals until they are turned into independent non-profit corporations.

Clalit's management yesterday called on the health fund's 32,000 staffers to agree to conditions of the recovery plan, which is due to be approved by the government today. Clalit spokesman David Tager said that management sent a copy of the proposed plan to the union "a week ago."

However Moshe Zelinger, acting head of the union representing 25,000 of the workers (excluding the physicians), claimed he had not received a final version of the recovery plan and thus could not comment.

Details of the plan released by the Finance Ministry yesterday — and faxed to the union by a reporter — were "quite different" from those the union had seen, said Zelinger. The workers are willing to cooperate, he added, but they are unwilling for it to occur at the expense of October's salaries.

The Finance Ministry insists that unless the workers agree to abide by the recovery plan worked out between the government and Clalit management, staffers will not get their October wages.

The workers have threatened to strike all community clinics and hospitals unless they receive their salaries on November 5. A strike would encompass 25,000 workers at all 12 Clalit hospitals and over 1,000 community clinics. The doctors, too, have so far not endorsed the recovery plan, but have not made a public statement about either wages or the sacrifices they are expected to make.

Wiretapping trial starts today for two private investigators

RAINE MARCUS

THE trial of private investigators Rafi Friedman and Ya'acov Tsur on 40 counts of wiretapping opens in Tel Aviv Magistrate's Court today, but defense lawyers are expected to complain that they do not have all prosecution evidence.

Those who commissioned and paid for the bugging have not been brought to trial, and law enforcement circles doubt they ever will.

Police sources said that although newspaper publishers Arnon Mozes and Ofer Nimrod have been questioned under caution several times, there is insufficient evidence to indict them.

The case has sparked mudslinging among Ha'aretz, Yediot Aharonot, and Ma'ariv, with the latter two newspapers blaming each other for the bugging of the phones and faxes of hundreds of media personalities, politicians, and businessmen.

Friedman and Tsur were arrested when Miriam Nofech-Mozes, managing director of the Yedioth-owned La'isha magazine, complained that her home phone was being tapped. Police caught an employee of Friedman and Tsur changing cassettes, used for recording conversations, in a vehicle near her home.

Friedman and Tsur were later arrested and charged with tapping the phones of Ma'ariv executive Ya'acov Kedoni and Yediot employee Yehonatan Angel.

A machine used for tapping mobile phones was found in the office of the investigators, where clerks were employed to transcribe conversations.

The prosecution later produced a list of hundreds of businessmen, politicians, private investigators, and media executives who allegedly were subjects of mobile phone tapping.

Friedman and Tsur were also charged with tapping faxes.

Tsur is expected to plead not guilty, although his partner has pleaded guilty to three counts of tapping private phones.

The two are presently free on bail.

14 military bases will make way for housing

JOSE ROSENFELD

FOURTEEN military bases will be moved from population centers in Haifa, the Tel Aviv area, Jerusalem, and Eilat to make more land available for housing in the country's high demand areas, the Treasury announced yesterday.

The Finance Ministry agreed to the move with the Defense Ministry after conducting an economic assessment to show that the costs of relocating the bases would be more than made up by the value of the evacuated land.

According to the Treasury, the transfer of the bases will cost hundreds of millions of shekels, which will be financed by the Israel Lands Administration's revenues from the sale of the land.

The ILA has already transferred NIS 70 million to the Defense Ministry to cover the costs of moving the bases.

Admiralty, Haifa; Anti-Aircraft School, Herzliya; Altit, Bat Galim, Haifa; Haifa Technical School; Katza, Eilat; Kurdani, in the Haifa Bay area; Manshiya, Jaffa; Mansura, Yokne'am junction; Marcus, Haifa; Neshet, Rina, Eilat; Saint Luke's, Haifa; Schmeller, Jerusalem.

October 26, 1994

Dear President Clinton, We, the Golan Residents Committee, stand with you today, in support of, and with great expectations for peace between Israel and Jordan. A peace which builds bridges of trust and cooperation, a peace which addresses the needs of both partners, a peace which does not infringe upon the human rights of individuals, a peace which does not challenge the ability to secure and protect oneself; it is the kind of peace we can all applaud. This is the kind of peace we seek between Israel and Syria. We fervently hope it is the kind of peace you are committed to working for, in this region.

Our campaign to keep the Golan Heights a sovereign part of Israel, thus meeting Israel's security and water needs, as well as protecting the human rights of the 13,500 Jewish residents who have settled there over the past 27 years, has wide Israeli public support and broad-based political support. Before you can facilitate the achievement of peace in our region, you must realize the constraints on a democratic government whose leaders wish to make decisions that will have immediate and long term repercussions on the entire country.

We also put it to you that, as the representatives of the 33 communities on the Golan Heights that would be directly affected by any agreement between Israel and Syria, we should be included in any discussions and decision making involving the Golan Heights. We believe our request is a valid and legitimate one.

As a leader of a democratic country and as a proponent of human rights, you will understand our questioning the logic of your visit to Syria at this time, although we do not question your good intentions. We must insist, however, that no American pressure be put on Israel and that no unfulfillable promises be made to Israel that would endanger reaching true and lasting peace between Israel and Syria.

We extend to you a warm invitation to visit the Golan Heights. We are certain that, on seeing with your own eyes what this small piece of land means to the State of Israel, you will gain a deeper understanding of all aspects of the Golan Heights issue.

We look forward to receiving a response from you in the very near future.

Most respectfully,
On behalf of the Golan residents:
